MEMORANDUM

TO: Value Adjustment Board

FROM: Heidi Prouse, Administrative Services Supervisor

SUBJECT: Notification of Good Cause Petitions Denied

DATE: March 20, 2026

Pursuant to Florida Administrative Code (FAC) 12D-9.015(11)(a), the Board may not extend the time for filing a petition, and the Board is not authorized to set and publish a deadline for late filed petitions. However, the failure to meet the statutory deadline for filing a petition to the Board does not prevent consideration of such a petition by the Board or Special Magistrate when the Board or Board designee determines that the petitioner has demonstrated good cause justifying consideration and that the delay will not, in fact, be harmful to the performance of Board functions in the taxing process. FAC 12D-9.015(11)(a) further defines the extraordinary circumstances that should be considered "good cause."

The following petitioners submitted good cause petitions, which were reviewed by the legal counsel and denied:

- Neil K. Allen Life Estate (25-431)
- Joseph W. and Joyce A. Fox (25-432)

Hernando County VAB – Late File/Good Cause Review – 2025

Petition Number	25-431
Filing Date	Petition states 9/12/25 VAB rec'd 9/15/25 w/good cause explanation Forwarded to VAB Designee 9/15/25 Checked TrIM – filing deadline 9/12/25
Review Date	9/15/25
Accept/Reject	Reject
Explanation	This petition was dated 9/12/25 and was received by VAB Administration on 9/15/25. The deadline for filing this VAB petition in Hernando County was 9/12/25 (per the TrIM notice), therefore, this petition is untimely filed, and petitioner must submit a good cause statement in order for this petition to be considered for acceptance. Petitioner submitted a good cause statement, advising that petitioner was not able to make it to the Clerk's Office to file this petition on 9/12/25 due to a flat tire. VAB Administration requested further documentation from petitioner in the form of proof of the flat tire: pictures, receipts, etc., and petitioner advised VAB Administration that the tire was fixed so there was no evidence to provide. The VAB has authorized VAB Administration and VAB Counsel to request additional information for any and all good cause requests. Without any proof of the alleged flat tire, petitioner has failed to meet any burden of proving that they were unable to timely file this petition. The VAB must rely on F.A.C. 12D-9.015(14)(a) for qualifiers for good cause determinations for late filed petitions. The VAB must strictly apply the laws and rules which govern Florida value adjustment boards without extension or deviation. Petitioner has failed to show good cause for the untimely filing of this petition pursuant to F.A.C. 12D-9.015(14)(a), and as such, this petition must be rejected.

Filing Date	Petition states 9/15/25 VAB rec'd 9/15/25 w/good cause explanation Forwarded to VAB Designee 9/15/25 Checked TrIM – filing deadline 9/12/25
Review Date	9/15/25
Accept/Reject	Reject
Explanation	This petition was dated 9/15/25 and was received by VAB Administration on 9/15/25. The deadline for filing this VAB petition in Hernando County was 9/12/25 (per the TrIM notice), therefore, this petition is untimely filed, and petitioner must submit a good cause statement in order for this petition to be considered for acceptance. Petitioner submitted a good cause statement, advising that petitioner purchased the subject parcel in June, 2025 and that petitioner was "told to wait for the TrIM notice, but it was never mailed to our address." Petitioner advised that they updated their address with the Post Office, DMV, and Voter's Registration. Petitioner advised that they were told that the TrIM notices were mailed the first week of September; petitioner did not advise who provided this information [TrIM notices are actually mailed mid-August]. Petitioner then advised that petitioner waited until September 10th to visit the Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) and received a copy of the TrIM notice and a VAB petition. Petitioner alleges that petitioner was advised that they had fifteen (15) days to file their VAB petition. As petitioner admits to receiving the TrIM notice on 9/10/25, VAB Counsel will point out that the TrIM notice states clearly that the filing deadline for a VAB petition is 9/12/25. In reviewing the TrIM notice, the mailing address indicated on the TrIM notice (pulled from the PAO website) is identical to the address provided by petitioner on the VAB petition form. There is prima facie evidence that the PAO did mail the TrIM notice to the petitioner as required by law. Pursuant to F.A.C. 12D-9.016(1): "In construing these rules or any order of the board, special magistrate, or a board designee, filing shall mean received by the board clerk during open hours or by the board…" This petition is therefore untimely filed, as petitioner received the TrIM notice on 9/10/25, but waited until 9/15/25 to file the same. The VAB must rely on F.A.C. 12D-9.015(14)(a) for qualifiers for good cause determinations for late filed petitions. The VAB must strictly apply the laws and rules which govern Florida value adjustment boards without extension or deviation. Petitioner has failed to show good cause for the untimely filing of this petition pursuant to F.A.C. 12D-9.015(14)(a), and as such, this petition must be rejected.

Good afternoon,

This email concerns the improper denial of our request to reschedule a Value Adjustment Board hearing in Hernando County. The attached communication from the VAB outlines the denial, citing reasons that do not meet the standard of being beyond the petitioner's control. Under Florida Statute §194.032(2), a petitioner is entitled to a single reschedule for "good cause," which is defined as "circumstances beyond the control of the person seeking to reschedule." Neither the remote versus in-person format of the hearing nor the volume of petitions filed in multiple counties constitutes a lack of good cause under this standard. We respectfully ask for the Department of Revenue's intervention to ensure that the Hernando County VAB follows the uniform policies and procedures mandated by Florida law.
We await your response and guidance.

Best Regards,

Diane DeFronzo

Good Morning,

Your "good cause" reschedule request was forwarded to the VAB Attorney for a determination of whether good cause exists to reschedule your petition hearing. The VAB Attorney has denied your request due to lack of "good cause". You may see the Attached Review for further details. Therefore, your hearing will continue as scheduled on October 24, 2024, at 2:00 p.m. EST. I do have an opening earlier that day, at 11:00 a.m. EST if that time works better for you.

Hernando County VAB – Reschedule/Good Cause Review – 2025

Petition Number	25-018
Review Date	10/10/25
Grant/Deny	Deny
Explanation	The instant hearing is scheduled on 10/24/25 at 2:00 pm [block of time], and the notice of hearing was provided to petitioner on 9/22/25. On 9/23/25, petitioner requested to attend the instant hearing telephonically, which request was automatically granted. Petitioner did not provide 10/24/25 as a date of unavailability when filing the instant petition, nor did petitioner provide any update to petitioner's availability after the petition filing. On 10/10/25, petitioner submitted a request to reschedule the referenced hearing, advising that petitioner has two (2) other VAB hearings scheduled in Palm Beach County on the same date, which VAB hearings are also telephonic as stated in the notices of hearing provided by petitioner. VAB Counsel will note that petitioner works for a tax services/taxpayer representative company that files VAB petitions throughout the State of Florida, and as such, should prepare for hearings in multiple jurisdictions on the same date by having multiple agents available for taxpayer representation. The purpose of F.A.C. 12D-9 and 12D-10 is to offer Florida VABs additional guidance for uniformity in operations among all Florida VABs. VAB Counsel will note that pursuant to F.A.C. 12D-9.019(4)(i), VABs are not obligated to grant reschedule requests (due to conflicting VAB hearing dates) if doing so will be prejudicial to the VAB's performance of its function in the taxing process. In this case, rescheduling the referenced hearing would be prejudicial to the VAB's performance of its function in the taxing process. Petitioner has failed to meet the criteria set forth in F.S. 194.032(2)(a) and F.A.C. 12D-9.019(4), and as such, petitioner's request must be denied, and the referenced hearing scheduled for 10/24/25 must continue as scheduled.

Good afternoon, Mr. Keller.

I am familiar with the good cause reschedule review, and I stand by the review and the decision for the reasons stated therein. The Hernando County Value Adjustment Board (VAB) hearing that the petitioner requested to be rescheduled, while possibly conflicting on date, did not conflict on time, therefore, the petitioner did not show an inability to attend the VAB hearing scheduled in Hernando County.

Further, Property Tax Alliance Group is a tax services/taxpayer representative company that files VAB petitions throughout the State of Florida, and as such, should prepare for hearings in multiple jurisdictions on the same date by having multiple agents available for taxpayer representation. Further still, as stated in the review, the petitioner failed to provide VAB Administration with any updated dates of unavailability.

Finally, as also stated in the review, the Hernando County VAB has received a record number of petitions this season, and rescheduling the referenced hearing would be prejudicial to the VAB's performance of its function in the taxing process.

I have copied Hernando County VAB Administration on this email, so that they are aware that the Department of Revenue has contacted me with regards to this matter, and so they are aware of my response thereto.

Respectfully,
Holly Cosby

Good morning, Holly,
Thank you for your response. While we appreciate the review, we respectfully disagree with the conclusion that our conflict does not constitute good cause for rescheduling.
Our Palm Beach County hearings begin at 8:30 a.m., and we are scheduled for twelve petitions that day. Even at a conservative estimate of 30 minutes per petition, those hearings will require a minimum of six hours to complete. Following those hearings, travel from Palm Beach County to Hernando County requires approximately four hours, making it physically impossible to attend both hearings on the same day.
As the senior partner of the firm, I personally attend certain complex hearings to ensure that each taxpayer receives the full due process they are entitled to under Florida law. The Value Adjustment Board does not determine the number of representatives a firm must employ or how representation is allocated among cases.
We have acted in good faith and requested the reschedule promptly upon identifying the unavoidable conflict.
We understand that the County has a high petition volume this year and appreciate the Board's efforts to manage the docket efficiently. However, denying this reschedule effectively deprives the taxpayer of fair representation in their appeal — something we believe runs contrary to the intent of the VAB process.
We respectfully request that the Board reconsider our good cause request given the documented and unavoidable scheduling and travel constraints.

Good afternoon, Mr. Keller.

I am familiar with the good cause reschedule review, and I stand by the review and the decision for the reasons stated therein. The Hernando County Value Adjustment Board (VAB) hearing that the petitioner requested to be rescheduled, while possibly conflicting on date, did not conflict on time, therefore, the petitioner did not show an inability to attend the VAB hearing scheduled in Hernando County.

Further, Property Tax Alliance Group is a tax services/taxpayer representative company that files VAB petitions throughout the State of Florida, and as such, should prepare for hearings in multiple jurisdictions on the same date by having multiple agents available for taxpayer representation. Further still, as stated in the review, the petitioner failed to provide VAB Administration with any updated dates of unavailability.

Finally, as also stated in the review, the Hernando County VAB has received a record number of petitions this season, and rescheduling the referenced hearing would be prejudicial to the VAB's performance of its function in the taxing process.

I have copied Hernando County VAB Administration on this email, so that they are aware that the Department of Revenue has contacted me with regards to this matter, and so they are aware of my response thereto.

Respectfully,
Holly Cosby

Good afternoon,

This email concerns the improper denial of our request to reschedule a Value Adjustment Board hearing in Hernando County. The attached communication from the VAB outlines the denial, citing reasons that do not meet the standard of being beyond the petitioner's control. Under Florida Statute §194.032(2), a petitioner is entitled to a single reschedule for "good cause," which is defined as "circumstances beyond the control of the person seeking to reschedule." Neither the remote versus in-person format of the hearing nor the volume of petitions filed in multiple counties constitutes a lack of good cause under this standard. We respectfully ask for the Department of Revenue's intervention to ensure that the Hernando County VAB follows the uniform policies and procedures mandated by Florida law.
We await your response and guidance.

Good afternoon, Mr. Hart.

Your office provided this issue to the Department of Revenue (DOR) for the forwarding of the same to me for review and response, which I provided. That was not an invitation to open discourse with my office directly with regards to this matter. It is my office policy to avoid corresponding directly with parties to the VAB process; this will be my only response to any communication from your office.

While I can appreciate the information you have provided, the review and decision will not be reversed or changed. Further, your office requested that the hearing in Hernando County be held telephonically, and it is scheduled to be heard as such, therefore, your personal presence in Hernando County is not something that required consideration.

VAB Hearing for Petition 25-258 (Exempt Homesteader)

I am submitting this integrated oversight packet to document significant procedural concerns related to my upcoming Value Adjustment Board (VAB) hearing scheduled for January 30, 2026, at 10:30 a.m. regarding Petition 25-258 (Exempt).

Despite my compliance with all requirements, including timely submission of evidence, the Property Appraiser's Office has failed to provide its evidence by the statutory deadline of January 15, 2026 at 5:00 p.m. As of today, January 20, 2026, I have received no evidence whatsoever.

Additionally, I have experienced repeated irregularities, including inconsistent information, deflection when attempting to correct factual errors, and statements implying I could be accused of harassment for raising legitimate concerns.

Because these issues affect not only my petition but the integrity of the VAB process, I respectfully request oversight, monitoring, and review.

Good afternoon, Attorney Keller.

I received this information from the Hernando County Value Adjustment Board (VAB) staff earlier today. VAB staff confirmed with the Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) that evidence was exchanged as required by law, and the PAO produced a copy of their postmarked envelope represented said exchange.

Additionally, I have directed VAB staff to provide the following to the petitioner, in writing, at the commencement of the January 30th hearing:

"The Hernando County Value Adjustment Board (VAB) Staff hereby confirms the following:

1) The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) confirmed the lawful exchange of evidence by providing the VAB with a copy of the January 14, 2026 postmarked PAO evidence envelope.
2) The integrity of the VAB process has not and will not be sacrificed by any VAB staff or VAB Special Magistrate.
3) The VAB cannot control the actions or inactions of the PAO.
4) All VAB hearings follow all statutory and DOR procedural requirements.
5) All VAB Special Magistrates are aware of the laws and rules that govern Florida Value Adjustment Boards, including the laws and rules of VAB evidence.
6) All VAB participants are respected by VAB staff and VAB Special Magistrates at all times.
7) The VAB is in compliance with all laws and rules that govern Florida Value Adjustment Boards.
8) VAB staff and VAB Special Magistrates do not retaliate against VAB participants.
9) The VAB, VAB Counsel, VAB staff, and VAB Special Magistrates practice accurate and transparent record-keeping."

I believe that I have been thorough in my review of this matter. Please advise if you believe that anything further should be addressed. I have copied Hernando VAB Administration on this email.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: LAMSON LLC

PARCEL KEY NO: 00620466

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Debra Perricone for Lamson LLC appeared by phone with additional representative, John J Franklin, Jr appearing in person before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by DANIEL SCOTT and KIMBERLY HERBERT. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $1,289,142, an assessed or capped value of $752,782, and a taxable value of $752,782. There was no change in values after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at a range of $800,000 to $900,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 4,700 SF commercial office building constructed in 2007. The adjusted SF is 5,380 per PAO. The parcel is located at 4314-4318 Lamson Avenue, Spring Hill, FL.

The PAO evidence consists of an evidence packet with a summary page, PRC with photos, a sales comparison approach and grid with (3) neighborhood sales, PRCs for all comparable sales utilized which photos and aerial location map and verbal testimony.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, valuation appeal letter with supporting photos, (2) recent comparable sales with PRCs, photos and maps, and/or loopnet data, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. No objections were made by any party present as it relates to data submittal noted above (unless specifically noted). All the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered CAMA analysis at TRIM and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with sales comparison analysis of 3 comparable sales that ranged in adjusted values from $301.77 to $347.49 per square foot and concluding at an indicated value of $320.00 per square foot. Adjustments were made, where applicable, for differences in location, age/condition, quality/design, size, land to building ratio and occupancy as well as a market conditions adjustment. A COS adjustment of 15% was indicated and would indicate just value of $1,297,000.

The Petitioner stated that the comparable sales utilized by the PAO were outliers and not indicative of value due to their locations on major roadways, recent significant improvements, and superior interior finish due to medical nature. The Petitioner offered 2 sales for comparison. The Petitioner stated that the prior assessment was at $795,000 and that current valuation is a 60% increase. Petitioner stated their indication of value should be within a range of $800,000 to $900,000 based on their sales data.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, stated that the comparable sales utilized are not outliers and are within the Dept of Revenues recommended guidelines. PAO concurs with Petitioner that location is important and that the Petitioner's property is proximate to Mariner Blvd and due to nature of tenants may not necessarily need main road visibility. The Special Magistrate asked PAO to speak to the omission of the comparable sale (provided by Petitioner) on Nightwalker as it was not located on a main road and thus, Petitioner states it is more similar than PAO's sales. PAO replied that it may not have been considered due to larger improvement size and may have fallen outside of their search parameters. The Special Magistrate will properly weigh and consider all evidence provided by all parties.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified like property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing leasable SF. This methodology is considered reliable in the valuation industry.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's extended market area and prioritized size of improvements (all sales are 3822-5435 SF leasable area) over location. The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the sales submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered. Petitioner included detail regarding the extra features, garages, etc. for the sales data provided, when available.

The Petitioner provided 2 improved sales; one larger in leasable area, similar multi-tenant office building, and not on a main commercial roadway and one smaller, similar multi-tenant office building, and on a main road (including the subject transfer, if applicable). Of these transfers, 0 were also used by the PAO. The Petitioner did not provide any adjustments for differences. The range of the Petitioner's comparable sales price per square foot was $152.13 to $163.10. Of the 2 sales provided by the Petitioner, the most reliable sale indicates a just value for the subject at $195.00 per square foot or $930,150 prior to applying the COS adjustment which would indicate a value of $790,600. The range of PAO adjusted values is $301.77 to $347.49 per square foot prior to COS adjustment which has been indicated at 15%. The PAO indicated value is noted to be $320.00 per square foot or $1,526,400. Applying the COS adjustment indicated by the PAO at 15% reflects a just value of $1,297,000 (rounded). The PAO just value conclusion is $1,289,142 which indicates a 15.5% COS adjustment and appears to indicate the subject's assessment is excessive based on the superior location and quality of the comparable sales. Additionally, sales utilized appear to be single tenant professional and/or medical buildings in comparison to the subject's multi-tenant office building. Due to the large disparity in values based on sales presented by both parties, the Special Magistrate will weigh the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

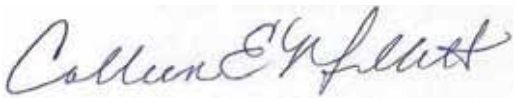
The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $942,700.

Special Magistrate

PETITION NO. 25-003

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: BRANDON WELLS

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

1 The Petitioner, BRANDON and MANDY WELLS did appear before the Special Magistrate and gave testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by DOUG MACK and BRANDON JIMENEZ. All parties present were put under sworn oath.

2 The Property Appraiser shows a just value of $334,527 ($161/SF heated, $139/SF adjusted), an assessed or capped value of $307,411, and a taxable value of $256,689.

3 The Petitioner did not state a specific value conclusion.

4 Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,072 heated base SF (2,412 SF adjusted) single family residence. It was constructed in 2024. The parcel is located at 16075 Dusky Sparrow Rd., Weeki Wachee FL.

5 The PAO evidence consists of verbal testimony, petition, PRC, summary pages, CAMA cost legend, improved sales, sales map and a statistical sales analysis report.

6 The Petitioners evidence consists of a petition, hearing notice, correspondence, verbal testimony, PRC, vacant land sales, TRIM, sales data, listing data and tax bill data.

7 In Hernando County, if the Petitioner is not present at the hearing, then the Petitioner must supply the evidence timely to the PAO and supply a copy of such evidence to the Clerk of Court also. If the Petitioner is present at the hearing, then they must just supply the information in a timely manner to the PAO for a proper evidence exchange. Per testimony, the evidence exchange complied with statutory time-frame requirements. No objections were made by any party present as it relates to data submittal noted above (unless specifically noted). All the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

8 Overall, there is sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

9 The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach via a submitted sales analysis report. This implies a heavy weight on CAMA analysis at TRIM, as well as in this hearing. Tertiary weight was placed on the cost approach, noted in the PRC. No detailed land or cost support was supplied. No weight was placed on the income approach to value. This is considered an appropriate mass appraisal methodology for this property type by the Special Magistrate.

10 The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF in their sales analysis report. This methodology is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF in the valuation industry but is often used in mass appraisal.

11 The PAO sales analysis report is a statistical study (a sampling of data used in the CAMA analysis) and no discrete adjustment process was supplied. A sales map, and PRC's of the sales was made available.

12 The PAO noted that residential real estate appreciated (on average) by 5% over the 2024 period.

13 The Petitioner stated that the MLS and builder plans show 2,044 SF heated for the subject (the PAO measurements concluded to 2,072 SF). The Special Magistrate notes the 28 SF discrepancy and will consider it herein. It is possible the PAO made an error in rounding or measuring, and it is also possible that the subject property is slightly larger than the plans called for. Either is possible. For consistency, the Special Magistrate will utilize 2,072 SF for the heated area.

14 The Petitioner stated that the home was completed in December of 2024 and had a complaint that the assessment cap was not applied correctly (discussing that the land value component increased rapidly and that they did not have a chance to appeal last year). The home was completed in 2024 and presumably had a value placed on it by the PAO in late 2024, and then a new value on the lien date of January 1, 2025. This is evidenced by the assessed value being below the just value estimate by the PAO. Neither party supplied detailed evidence on assessment caps for the subject such that the exact calculations could be tracked. The cap would apply to land and building values combined and not separately, and thus the Petitioner discussion about land values is not relevant for the calculation of the cap. Given that the property was finalized on December 20 and the lien date is less than 2 weeks later, the Special Magistrate is uncertain why the Just value is $334,527, and the assessed value is $307,411 on the lien date (the first year a property is on the tax rolls the just value and assessed value should be the same as assessment caps have not yet been applied?). It is possible that the PAO valued the property via CAMA at the end of 2024, and then on January 1 of 2025 the value increased dramatically, creating the assessment cap situation seemingly in place (?). No clarification on this was noted by either party, nor data on the applicability or accuracy of the 2024 value and if there is an error it appears to be in the favor of the taxpayer. Neither party supplied sufficient information to calculate the exact assessment cap in this instance, or if there should be a cap at all in this first year on the tax rolls as an improved property.

15 The Petitioner implied that the permit cost of $165,000 noted by the builder should be used as value or a value component. The Special Magistrate notes that builder permit costs can vary widely from actual value depending on a long list of possible factors. In this case it does appear that the builder permit costs are not a reliable indicator of value for the subject.

16 The Petitioner stated that the PAO did not uniformly apply their calculations for adjusted SF. The PAO included the detail sheet that shows how the CAMA system calculates adjusted SF for each component of the property. The Petitioner did not have a calculation to show that this was incorrectly applied to their property, and this detail sheet is built into the PAO CAMA model. It should apply in exactly the same fashion to all assessed property in the county. There is no evidence at this hearing to show that it is not working properly (whether the valuation economics is accurately supported by their cost calculations is a separate discussion and there was no evidence regarding this either).

17 The Petitioner supplied dated sales information that from 2019 to 2023. It is not considered reliable for a value indication on the lien date. They also supplied similar data for 2024 (which is more reliable). Detailed information on these sales was not provided. They are all within their zip code, all being 3 bedroom, 2 bath, and 2 car garage homes. Her study showed a median of $183/SF for these sales. These tended to be smaller (1949 SF heated median) which would require a downward adjustment for scale, downward 10% adjustment for COS, and possibly a small downwards adjustment for quality. The Petitioner data credibly and reliably supports a just value of $159/SF heated ($329,448) for the subject property.

18 The PAO supplied 4 improved sales (including the subject) on their statistical grid. Least reliance has been placed on Sale 4 (probably the highest quality home in the dataset, superior to the subject). The Special Magistrate relied upon heated SF in his analysis. The Special Magistrate will adjust upwards 5%/year for improving market conditions (although no adjustment was applied in this instance given the 2024 completion dates for all of these spec sales), slight adjustments for land value (the Special Magistrate concurs with the Petitioner that there is no reason supported by the evidence that the land value at the subject should be significantly higher than at sales 2, and 3), age/condition if warranted, size/scale, quality (slight downward adjustments), slight adjustment for bedroom/bath counts, some adjustment downwards for subareas at sales 2 & 3 (more subareas as a percentage of total heated area) and downwards 10% for COS. After adjustment, these sales indicated a range of $148/SF to $172/SF heated (median $155/SF heated). The PAO sales, with greatest weight applied to Sales 1, 2, and 3, indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($152.50/SF heated) $315,980 and that the subject is over assessed.

19 Reviewing all the sales presented by both parties, the evidence credibly and reliably supports a just value of $322,500 for the subject that the subject is over assessed.

20 The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighting the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level. Intangible value of approximately 0% is appropriate for the subject property (goodwill, assembled workforce, franchise, etc.).

21 The DOR utilize 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

22 Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

23 All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

24 The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs. This implies that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". The Special Magistrate training material for the current year also consistently and strongly advises a deduction for 1st and 8th criteria.

25 The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered and addressed to the property at issue, as part of the development of the assessment. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation*. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:*

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;
The sale of similar properties is considered within the PAO CAMA system, as well as within their direct application of sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sales as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation as applicable.

(2) The highest and best use…,(shortened)
Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, as noted on the submitted subject property data. Comparable data was chosen based on this information.

(3) The location of said property;
The subject property is assigned a location code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is chosen with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering the other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of said property;
The size of building, site and site improvements are based on data contained with the PRC and all comparables are chosen with as similar size as possible, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon;
The PAO uses cost data within their CAMA cost/market hybrid model. When applicable, a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors are also estimated and utilized within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property;
The PAO considers condition through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners. A % good or % depreciation factor is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and

When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files as well as general market statistics. Actual subject performance is also considered when that information is available.

(8) The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or a typical terms of financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The PAO considers cost of sales within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

> Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

1 In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

2 The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

3 The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC. The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighting all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $322,500.

PETITION NO. 25-018

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: HCA Health Services of Florida, Inc

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Tim Hart and Craig Smith for HCA Health Services of Florida, Inc appeared before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by DANIEL SCOTT and KIMBERLY HERBERT. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $60,812,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 442,346 SF private hospital that was constructed in 1984 with multiple additions constructed in 1985, 1989, 1994, 1995, 2003, 2013, and 2020. The subject is located at 11375 Cortez Boulevard, Brooksville, FL.

The PAO evidence consists of an evidence packet with a summary page, PRC with photos and aerial photos of all subject buildings, an extensive list of renovation permits, a cost approach with Marshall Valuation Service depreciation table and supporting documentation, as well as verbal testimony.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, subject PRC with photos and aerials of all buildings, trim notice, additional color photos and aerials, DR493, a cost approach analysis by Core Logic Swift Estimator with supporting documentation, (3) comparable land sales with maps, deeds and supporting sale documentation, income approach analysis, rebuttal evidence and expert witness testimony by Craig L. Smith, MAI, and verbal testimony. A second rebuttal was also submitted.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. The PAO objected to the Petitioner's Second Rebuttal Evidence submission, and it was not admitted as evidence. All the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the cost approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a cost approach for the subject which consists of numerous buildings and as such, numerous classes which were indicated as follows: General hospital - Class B (buildings 1-6 and 12), Warehouse - Class S (building 7), Warehouse - Class C (building 11), Medical Office – Class C (building 13), and Office - Class C (building 14). PAO indicated effective age to be 30 years with a 45-year economic life for the building improvements and 10-year effective age and 15-year economic life for site improvements with supporting depreciation table from Marshall Valuation Service. The cost approach valuation included extensive list of building and site improvements, and after COS adjustment of 15% indicated a value of $104,754,278.

The Petitioner agreed with the classification of buildings utilized by the PAO and provided a cost approach analysis by CoreLogic – Swift Estimator. Three sections of building improvements were outlined in the cost analysis; hospital section, warehouse section and medical office with a separate section for land and site improvements. Depreciation was developed utilizing a weighted depreciation and noted at 73% for hospital, 47% for warehouse and 22% for medical office. Petitioner included (3) land sales for comparison that are located within Hernando County and utilized a land value of $10,944,000 within the cost approach (which appears to be the assessed value of the land on the PRC) to value however shows an indicated land value by market of $3,768,252 based on an adjusted per square foot price of $0.90 which represented the mean of the sales utilized in the Petitioner's analysis; no adjustments were made to sales other than COS at 15%. Petitioner also provided a Proforma Income Analysis based on a lease comparable located in Phoenix, Arizona.

The petitioner's comparable property located in Arizona was reviewed and not considered a viable or reliable comparable for valuation of the subject property in Florida. While both facilities are of similar use type (hospital), the Arizona property is located in a distinct market area with materially different economic, demographic, and regulatory conditions.

Market value for ad valorem purposes under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes must reflect the reactions of buyers and sellers within the local Florida market, as influenced by state-specific factors such as certificate-of-need regulations, construction cost differentials, reimbursement environments, and regional capitalization rates. Because these influences vary significantly between states, the Arizona property does not provide meaningful market evidence for the subject's location. Accordingly, little or no weight was given to the income approach provided in supporting the Petitioner's valuation.

In rebuttal to the PAO's evidence, the Petitioner provided an evidence packet that was presented by the Petitioner's expert witness, Craig Smith, MAI regarding the certificate-of-need regulations and the economic age/life method of depreciation utilized specific to hospitals. Mr. Smith did not agree with the PAO's method of depreciation stating that it did not account for functional and economic depreciation. Mr. Smith went on to speak about changes in the industry regarding allocation of hospital construction from 80% inpatient care space and 20% diagnostic space in the past to current trends of constructing hospitals with 80% of building area attributed to diagnostic treatment and 20% for inpatient care thus, reiterating both functional and economic obsolescence in older facilities such as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence and expert witness testimony, argued that the Petitioner did not consider permits and improvements, noting there were currently outstanding permits of over 8 million dollars for ongoing improvements. Additionally, the PAO defended use of the Marshall Valuation Service data as an industry standard method that has been relied upon in determining depreciation for the subject improvements.

While both the PAO and Petitioner agreed on classifications, they disagreed on depreciation methodology.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified like property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing leasable SF. This methodology is considered reliable in the valuation industry.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

Both the PAO and Petitioner relied upon the cost approach to value. The Special Magistrate will weigh the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions.

Of the two cost approaches presented for consideration, one analysis included detailed component breakdowns, verifiable quantities, and supporting documentation sufficient to allow independent reconstruction of the cost estimate. The other relied primarily on a computerized or model-generated cost output without supporting data identifying underlying cost components or applied modifiers.

In evaluating the credibility of each approach, the Special Magistrate notes that appraisal methodology must be both transparent and reproducible to be given probative weight. The approach supported by detailed documentation demonstrates clear adherence to recognized cost-estimating procedures and allows for verification of assumptions, component costs, and depreciation calculations. In contrast, the computerized cost model, while potentially derived from a recognized source, lacks sufficient supporting evidence to confirm its inputs, adjustments, or underlying assumptions.

Because the documented cost approach can be independently verified and reconstructed, it is afforded greater weight and credibility in the reconciliation of value. The unsupported computerized version, though not necessarily incorrect, cannot be independently validated and therefore receives limited evidentiary weight in determining market value.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

Taking all documentation and testimony into consideration, it appears the indicated just value of $89,529,735 does not appear to be in excess.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be denied.

PETITIONER: ANA Realty, LLC – Sunny Sia
ATTORNEY SPECIAL MAGISTRATE: Joseph Haynes Davis, Esq.
HERNANDO COUNTY PROPERTY APPRAISER: Nicholas Cisek; Doug Mack
RELEVANT STATUTE: 193.461;
ISSUES BEFORE THE SPECIAL MAGISTRATE: Agricultural classification that the Petitioner seeks as per Florida Statute 193.461 and whether or not the parcel at issue qualifies as "lands that are used primarily for bona fide agricultural purposes shall be classified agricultural." The term "bona fide agricultural purposes" means good faith commercial agricultural use of the land, as per Florida Statute 193.461.
All parties were sworn without objection.
Evidence exchange between the parties.
Property Appraiser evidence packet #1 admitted without objection.
Property values were read into the record by the property appraiser's office:
JUST 355,037, ASESSED 284,029, TAXABLE 284,029: with no classification.

FINDINGS OF FACT:

THE PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTED
Hernando County Property Appraiser Nicholas Cisek testified: The application was filed on 1/19/2025 for the agriculture classification. Testified that the instant denial was because there was no evidence of bona fide agricultural use before 1/1/2025 and that the application was for timberland, but the evidence shows that the use is not timberland at all. Testified that the property fails to meet the statutory requirements. Testified that the applicable subsections to 193.461 3 (B) (1) for the Property Appraiser's denial are:
d. Size, as it relates to specific agricultural use, but a minimum acreage may not be required for agricultural assessment;
e. Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices;
g. Such other factors as may become applicable.

Testified that a forestry management plan was submitted by the Petitioner 1/19/2025 with the application for the classification. Testified that the forestry management plan is a guide to show how you care for the land properly and shows what's on the land and the type of soil. Testified that the Petitioner did not perform as per the forestry management plan and did not spray in the forest area. Testified that the Petitioner only sprayed on the outside of the land but not on the inside of the land. Testified that the plan mentioned several invasive species on the land but the Petitioner did not do any forestry mulching as viewed by the 1st site visit by the Property Appraiser's Office.

Testified that the Property Appraiser's Office met with the Petitioner two months later and that the mulching machine had been driven around the property line and driven making a path but not driven around the entirety of the property. Testified that the Property Appraiser did not consider that a firebreak line which is needed to comport with the (e) prong and the "Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices" language of Florida Statute 193.461 3 (B) (1). Testified that the Property Appraiser was looking for an increase in the care of the property with the two site visit inspections. As a result, the Property Appraiser's Office believes that the parcel does not comport with subsection (e) of 193.461 (3) B (1) and the "Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices" clause of that subsection.

The Property Appraiser's evidence is relevant, credible and admissible.

FOR THE PETITIONER: ANA Realty, LLC – Sunny Sia testified. Testified that the 9.1-acre parcel has been actively managed as timberland. Testified that the Petitioner has followed the managed forestry plan. Testified that the Petitioner's activities have been consistent with Bonafide agricultural use and Petitioner has implemented a variety of timber management practices to maintain and improve the use. Testified that the property meets all criteria for the classification that the Petitioner seeks. Testified that the Petitioner purchased the property 11/2023 for $250,000.00 with the intent to continue the agricultural use of the property which was established by the prior owner as a timberland operation. Testified that there have been no changes in the use of the property since the 11/2023 purchase. Testified that the Petitioner was previously denied the classification in 2024 for a late file but not for the lack of use.

Testified that the Property Appraiser denial was based upon an incomplete understanding of the active management and professional planning already in place. Testified that the plan was prepared by the Florida Forest Service on 9/23/2024 and that the plan provides detail recommendations for mulching, brush cutting, removal of invasive species and long-term timber management . Testified that the plan demonstrates professional implementation of the plan. Testified that the invasive plants were removed and that timber is a long-term crop and that the property has uninterrupted timberland use. Testified that the Petitioner is not harvesting but just continuing as is from the prior owner. Testified that the Petitioner has done weed control, and mulching to satisfy and comport with subsection (e) of 193.461 (3) B (1) and the "Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices" clause of that subsection.

The Petitioner's evidence is relevant, credible and admissible.

Conclusions of Law
CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The undersigned Special Magistrate finds that the following below is controlling and or persuasive in the recommendation:
STATUTE: Florida Statute 193.461 3 (B) (1) subsection (e) whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices.

It is the recommendation of this Attorney Special Magistrate that this instant petition 2025-020 be denied. The term "bona fide agricultural purposes" means good faith commercial agricultural use of the land, as per Florida Statute 193.461, and as a result of the subsections Florida Statute 193.461 3 (B) (1) subsection (e) having not been met, the basis for the denial by the Hernando County Property Appraiser for this property which was purportedly for timber growing, is therefore recommended to be denied by this undersigned Attorney Special Magistrate.

The pertinent part of Florida Statute 193.461 applicable to the instant matter reads as follows:
(b) Subject to the restrictions specified in this section, only lands that are used primarily for bona fide agricultural purposes shall be classified agricultural. The term "bona fide agricultural purposes" means good faith commercial agricultural use of the land.
1. In determining whether the use of the land for agricultural purposes is bona fide, the following factors may be taken into consideration:
a. The length of time the land has been so used.
b. Whether the use has been continuous.
c. The purchase price paid.
d. Size, as it relates to specific agricultural use, but a minimum acreage may not be required for agricultural assessment.
e. Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices.
f. Whether the land is under lease and, if so, the effective length, terms, and conditions of the lease.
g. Such other factors as may become applicable.

A preponderance of the evidence shows that the Petitioner did not, as per Florida Statute 193.461 which is the Agricultural Statute for the state of Florida, with subsection (e) above, meet the requirements set forth via the following language: "lands that are used primarily for bona fide agricultural purposes shall be classified agricultural." The term "bona fide agricultural purposes" means good faith commercial agricultural use of the land, as per Florida Statute 193.461.

As a result, it is recommended that the classification that the Petitioner seeks should be NOT granted.

A preponderance of the evidence shows that the Petitioner did not perform as per the forestry management plan and did not spray in the forest area and that the Petitioner only sprayed on the outside of the land but not on the inside of the land.

A preponderance of the evidence shows that despite the forestry plan mentioning several invasive species on the land, the Petitioner did not do any forestry mulching as viewed by the 1st site visit by the Property Appraiser's Office.

A preponderance of the evidence shows that after the Property Appraiser's Office met with the Petitioner, two months later and that the mulching machine had been driven around the property line and driven making a path but not driven around the entirety of the property which did not result in a required fire break line which is needed to comport with the (e) prong and the "Whether an indicated effort has been made to care sufficiently and adequately for the land in accordance with accepted commercial agricultural practices, including, without limitation, fertilizing, liming, tilling, mowing, reforesting, and other accepted agricultural practices" language of Florida Statute 193.461 3 (B) (1).

A preponderance of the evidence shows by and through the testimony of the Petitioner that the Petitioner is not harvesting but just continuing as is from the prior owner.

Thus, by a preponderance of the evidence, this Special Magistrate recommends this instant petition should NOT be granted and the classification sought on the issue that Petitioner seeks should NOT be granted. As to PETITION: 2025-020 said petition is recommended to be NOT GRANTED.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the Property Appraiser was admitted.

The Petitioner failed to follow the local administrative policy/ rules regarding submittal of evidence for a telephonic hearing. The Petitioner indicated that they were uninformed about the requirement to provide hard copies of their evidence to the Value Adjustment Board Clerk. However, the Value Adjustment Board Clerk testified that they emailed the instructions, and called to relay the instructions regarding evidence submittal to the Petitioner. The Petitioner requested a reschedule due to their misunderstanding of the evidence submittal rules. However, the hearing proceeded at the scheduled time.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,206 square feet of living area, and 1,496 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 2019.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $157/ SF and $246,500, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $169/ SF and $253,023, overall, above value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is unsupported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding five sales, indicating a range of values between $97 and $144 per square foot. However, no actual sales data was provided (address, age, size, extra features, etc.). Therefore, nothing was available to compare with the subject.

The Property Appraiser's sales were considered, as follows:

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the Property Appraiser was admitted. However, the Property Appraiser's sales, adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale (per DOR requirements) support an adjustment.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the Property Appraiser was admitted.

The Petitioner failed to follow the local administrative policy/ rules regarding submittal of evidence for a telephonic hearing. The Petitioner indicated that they were uninformed about the requirement to provide hard copies of their evidence to the Value Adjustment Board Clerk. However, the Value Adjustment Board Clerk testified that they emailed the instructions, and called to relay the instructions regarding evidence submittal to the Petitioner. The Petitioner requested a reschedule due to their misunderstanding of the evidence submittal rules. However, the hearing proceeded at the scheduled time.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,750 square feet of living area, and 1,981 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 2001.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $138/ SF and $267,750, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $111/ SF and $220,776, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding sales. However, the information was incomplete, and no actual sales data was provided (address, age, size, extra features, etc.). Therefore, nothing was available to compare with the subject.

The Property Appraiser's sales were considered, as follows:

CONCLUSION

The best market evidence available (Single Family Residence sales) supports the subject's assessment, and there is not enough relevant data to make any changes. Therefore, the petition should be Denied.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the Property Appraiser was admitted.

The Petitioner failed to follow the local administrative policy/ rules regarding submittal of evidence for a telephonic hearing. The Petitioner indicated that they were uninformed about the requirement to provide hard copies of their evidence to the Value Adjustment Board Clerk. However, the Value Adjustment Board Clerk testified that they emailed the instructions, and called to relay the instructions regarding evidence submittal to the Petitioner. The Petitioner requested a reschedule due to their misunderstanding of the evidence submittal rules. However, the hearing proceeded at the scheduled time.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,325 square feet of living area, and 1,568 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 1981.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $145/ SF and $228,650, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $124/ SF and $194,650, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding sales. However, the information was incomplete, and no actual sales data was provided (address, age, size, extra features, etc.). Therefore, nothing was available to compare with the subject.

The Property Appraiser's sales were considered, as follows:

CONCLUSION

The best market evidence available (Single Family Residence sales) supports the subject's assessment, and there is not enough relevant data to make any changes. Therefore, the petition should be Denied.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,755 square feet of living area, and 1,810 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 1988.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $126/ SF and $238,000 overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $134/ SF and $242,426, overall, above value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is unsupported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding several sales. However, the information was incomplete, and no actual sales data was provided (address, age, size, extra features, etc.). Therefore, nothing was available to compare with the subject.

The Property Appraiser's sales were considered, as follows:

CONCLUSION

In the final reconciliation of value, consideration was given to the subject being slightly smaller on average than the comparables; however, having a higher land value. The best market evidence available supports an adjustment to the assessment ($235,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the Property Appraiser was admitted. However, the Property Appraiser's sales, adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale (per DOR requirements) support an adjustment.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,367 square feet of living area, and 1,566 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 2002.

Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $146/ SF and $233,750, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $124/ SF and $194,885 overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding sales. CONCLUSION

The best market evidence available (Single Family Residence sales) supports the subject's assessment, and there is not enough relevant data to make any changes. Therefore, the petition should be Denied.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence containing 1,240 square feet of living area, and 1,479 adjusted square feet (adjusted for porch/ patio/ garage space, which is applied at a fraction of the full value applied to the living space). The house was built in 1978.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $136/ SF and $192,950 overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $102/ SF and $150,657 overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

As discussed, the Petitioner was unable to provide any physical evidence for the hearing, due to failure to follow evidence submittal policies. In this case, the Petitioner testified regarding sales. However, the information was incomplete, and no actual sales data was provided (address, age, size, extra features, etc.). Therefore, nothing was available to compare with the subject.

The Property Appraiser's sales were considered, as follows:

CONCLUSION

The best market evidence available (Single Family Residence sales) supports the subject's assessment, and there is not enough relevant data to make any changes. Therefore, the petition should be Denied.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of HPA Borrower2016-2, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5180-1247-0010. This property is described as a single-family residence with a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 5308 Abagail Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,828 square feet of heated building area on a 14,241-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1986 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $311,622, with an assessed value of $282,487 and a taxable value of $282,487. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $298,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (18 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (3 pages) - Petition form, request for telephonic hearing

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In preparation of this value review hearing, the property appraiser presented sales of comparable residential properties in the area. These sales were compared to the subject on the basis of adjusted square foot after deducting the value of extra features. Adjusted building areas were calculated between heated living area and gross building area weighted by percentage of overall utility under 52 building area classifications. No other adjustments are made and the mean and median prices are compared to the subject property in support of just value.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 5294 Birchwood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,878 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1988 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $390,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 5212 Abagail Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,935 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 15,177 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $356,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 5236 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,918 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,335 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $346,500.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $346,500 to $390,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $147 and $151, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 23%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to four sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $277,419 and $307,410, indicating a median price of $298,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of four nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $294,525 and $331,500, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $311,622 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 2 2022 1 Borrower, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5220-1481-0030. This property is described as a single-family residence with a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 5440 Idleweise Ct, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,531 square feet of heated building area on a 10,000-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2006 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $246,606, with an assessed value of $246,606 and a taxable value of $246,606. This has been changed since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The prior just value was $253,439. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to but no specific amount was disclosed.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (17 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In preparation of this value review hearing, the property appraiser presented sales of comparable residential properties in the area. These sales were compared to the subject on the basis of adjusted square foot after deducting the value of extra features. Adjusted building areas were calculated between heated living area and gross building area weighted by percentage of overall utility under 52 building area classifications. No other adjustments are made and the mean and median prices are compared to the subject property in support of just value.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 – 10238 Brentlawn St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,687 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1996 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $360,000.

• PA Sale 2 – 5379 Idelweise Ct, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,484 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1997 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $299,000.

• PA Sale 3 – 9650 Langan St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,295 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,924 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $269,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $269,000 to $360,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $160 and $165, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 20%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has made no analysis of comparable sales.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the subject property. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made no deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $228,650 and $306,000, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $246,606 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Based on an inspection of the property on September 23, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $330,468, with an assessed value of $330,468 and a taxable value of $330,468. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $285,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (20 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

• PA Sale 1 – 10375 Musa Road, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,644 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 12,313 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $315,000.

• PA Sale 2 – 11376 Blythville Road, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,239 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 15,825 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $384,900.

• PA Sale 3 – 11231 Addison Street, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,215 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $370,000.

• PA Sale 4 – 12239 Penfield Street, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,691 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1994 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 12,996 square foot residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $385,000.

Four qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $315,000 to $385,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $144 and $145, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 17%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to six sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $191,055 and $313,000, indicating a median price of $285,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of six nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. The only comment was about the subject's location on a closed golf course. The property appraiser, however, has included sales with similar locations on the closed golf course. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $267,750 and $327,250, all four lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $327,250 calculated as follows:

$385,000 (top of sales range) x 0.85 (cost of sale adjustment) = $327,250 (revised just value)

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be GRANTED IN PART to a revised just value of $327,250.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2019 1 Borrower, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5130-0856-0120. This property is described as a single-family residence with a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 2389 Dubois Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,782 square feet of heated building area on a 12,991-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2006 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 23, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $278,086, with an assessed value of $265,319 and a taxable value of $265,319. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $238,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (17 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In preparation of this value review hearing, the property appraiser presented sales of comparable residential properties in the area. These sales were compared to the subject on the basis of adjusted square foot after deducting the value of extra features. Adjusted building areas were calculated between heated living area and gross building area weighted by percentage of overall utility under 52 building area classifications. No other adjustments are made and the mean and median prices are compared to the subject property in support of just value.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 – 13812 Coronado Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,932 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2008 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 12,366 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $379,000.

• PA Sale 2 – 3016 Dumas Avenue, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,703 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $317,500.

• PA Sale 3 – 2189 Bolger Avenue, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,539 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 16,310 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $310,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $310,000 to $379,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $162 and $162, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 23,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 17%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to four sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $227,905 and $243,247, indicating a median price of $238,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of four nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $263,500 and $322,150, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $278,086 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR Acquisitions 3, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5180-1236-0240. This property is described as a single-family residence with a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 5129 Roble Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,093 square feet of heated building area on a 10,055-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2005 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 25, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $295,460, with an assessed value of $295,460 and a taxable value of $295,460. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $280,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (16 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

property in support of just value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 12042 Cavern Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,236 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $385,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 10524 Thornberry Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,208 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,466 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $357,500.

- PA Sale 3 - 4337 Gondolier Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,046 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 13,673 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $320,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $320,000 to $385,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $145 and $146, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 25,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 20%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to three sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $258,877 and $292,555, indicating a median price of $280,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of three nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $272,000 and $327,250, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $295,460 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of AO Propco 1, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5010-0039-0160. This property is described as a single-family residence with a carport. The subject property is located at 6330 Jamaica Road, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,212 square feet of heated building area on a 9,965-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1983 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 25, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $217,470, with an assessed value of $217,470 and a taxable value of $217,470. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $193,084. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (15 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

property in support of just value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 5431 Alderwood St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,436 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1977 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,116 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $249,900.

- PA Sale 2 - 6742 Treehaven Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 1-bathroom 1,340 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1971 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 9,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $235,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 7230 Fair Oaks St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,342 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1972 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 7,500 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $300,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $235,000 to $300,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $146 and $148, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes.It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 25,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 28%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to three sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $141,683 and $278,000, indicating a median price of $193,084 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of three nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $199,750 and $255,000, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $217,470 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of RS Rental III A, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5150-0961-0010. This property is described as a single-family residence with a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 10266 Dunkirk Road, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,110 square feet of heated building area on a 14,375-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2004 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on February 28, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $317,075, with an assessed value of $317,075 and a taxable value of $317,075. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $292,258. This request is supported by the average price indicated by making a 15% adjustment to the property appraiser's total sales prices.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (16 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 10375 Musa Road, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,644 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 12,313 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $315,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 11231 Addison St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,215 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $370,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 5236 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,918 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,335 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $346,500.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $315,000 to $370,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $145 and $145, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on February 28,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has presented no separate sales comparison approach rather has referenced the property appraiser's analysis on page 5 of Exhibit PAO-A. The petitioner notes that making a cost of sale adjustment to the Total Sales Value of $1,031,500 indicates an average adjusted price for the three sales of $292,258 which supports a reduction in assessment.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $267,750 and $314,500, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $314,500 calculated as follows:

$370,000 (top of sales range) x 0.85 (cost of sale adjustment) = $314,500 (revised just value)

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be GRANTED IN PART to a revised just value of $314,500.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of RS Rental III A, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5020-0126-0060. This property is described as a single-family residence. The subject property is located at 1050 Marlow Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,170 square feet of heated building area on a 8,625-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1971 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on April 13, 2023, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $129,799, with an assessed value of $129,799 and a taxable value of $129,799. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $109,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (16 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 6021 Alderwood St, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,150 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1972 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,116 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $249,500.

- PA Sale 2 - 486 Stillwater Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 1-bathroom 1,050 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1971 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 7,500 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $199,900.

- PA Sale 3 - 7380 Pinehurst Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 1-bathroom 1,045 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 1973 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 7,500 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $230,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $199,900 to $249,500. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $177 and $177, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on April 13,2023. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to four sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $76,070 and $160,626, indicating a median price of $109,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The property appraiser reports that one of the sales presented by the petitioner sold in 2024 for $115,000, then again in 2025 for $230,000. This could be caused by renovations since the first sale or a flipped property not representative of market value for the subject. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of four nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $169,915 and $212,075, falling below the just value of the property and proving that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $129,799 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Lillbeth C. Lahitte on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5160-1038-0020. This property is described as a single-family residence with a pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 4456 Mariner Boulevard, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,929 square feet of heated building area on a 10,000-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1990 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on March 7, 2023, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. The subject property was not sold within the 12 months preceding the valuation date; however, it was purchased in Jul-2023 for $312,000. Based on permit dates on the property record card, the pool was added after the subject sale.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $337,934, with an assessed value of $337,934 and a taxable value of $287,212. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $289,000. This request is supported by the average price indicated by making a 15% adjustment to the property appraiser's total sales prices.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (17 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

property in support of just value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 4024 Dristol Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,854 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1995 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,454 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $305,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 12550 Linden Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,966 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1989 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,754 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $370,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 5236 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,918 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,335 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $346,500.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $305,000 to $370,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $148 and $145, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on March 7,2023. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has presented no separate sales comparison approach rather has referenced the property appraiser's analysis on page 6 of Exhibit PAO-A. The petitioner notes that making a cost of sale adjustment to the Total Sales Value of $1,021,500 indicates an average adjusted price for the three sales of $289,425 which supports a reduction in assessment.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $259,250 and $314,500, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $314,500 calculated as follows:

$370,000 (top of sales range) x 0.85 (cost of sale adjustment) = $314,500 (revised just value)

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be GRANTED IN PART to a revised just value of $314,500.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Michael & Addie Maggiore on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R10-223-18-3604-0370-0410. This property is described as a single-family residence with a three-car garage. The subject property is located at 3929 Braemere Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 3,102 square feet of heated building area on a 10,656-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2006 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on June 6, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $416,757, with an assessed value of $377,113 and a taxable value of $377,113. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $354,000. This request is supported by verbal testimony of comparable sales analysis.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (17 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 4484 Marsalis Ct, Spring Hill is described as a 6-bedroom 3-bathroom 3,089 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 8,548 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $563,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 14402 Arborglades Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 6-bedroom 3-bathroom 3,089 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2007 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 8,114 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $535,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 13516 Haverhill Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,566 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 8,111 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $399,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $399,000 to $563,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $145 and $146, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on June 6,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has verbally discussed details pertaining to six sales presented to the property appraiser prior to the hearing. These sales were selected based on proximity to the subject with consideration given to size, land area, year built, effective age. A 15% cost of sale adjustment was also deducted from each sale. These adjusted sale prices range between $313,194 and $432,000, bracketing the property appraiser's just value. This data indicates a median price of $354,000 which is the basis for the petitioner's just value request. The special magistrate finds that the petitioner's verbal discussion of six nearby sales does not constitute sufficient or credible evidence to overcome documentary sales evidence presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $339,150 and $478,550, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $416,757 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Bernadette C. Magill & Wanda M. Bowlsbey on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R34-122-20-0455-0004-0140. This property is described as a single-family residence with a one-car garage. The subject property is located at 26448 Bertram Road, Brooksville, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,044 square feet of heated building area on a 7,200-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2019 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 22, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $227,204, with an assessed value of $212,641 and a taxable value of $212,641. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $192,355. This request is supported by the average price indicated by making a 15% adjustment to the property appraiser's total sales prices.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (15 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 6429 Frank Ct, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,000 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2019 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 6,044 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $210,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 26370 Mc Allister St, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,000 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2019 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 6,270 square foot residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $234,000.

- PA Sale 3 - 6421 Frank Ct, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,000 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 6,206 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $234,900.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $210,000 to $234,900. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $222 and $229, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has presented no separate sales comparison approach rather has referenced the property appraiser's analysis on page 5 of Exhibit PAO-A. The petitioner notes that making a cost of sale adjustment to the Total Sales Value of $678,900 indicates an average adjusted price for the three sales of $192,355 which supports a reduction in assessment.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $178,500 and $199,665, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $199,665 calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be GRANTED IN PART to a revised just value of $199,665.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR Borrower 2022 A, LLC on October 27, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 12 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 2025-051 through 2025-064, inclusive, except 2025-053 and 2025-057. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R14-223-18-3593-0009-0210. This property is described as a single-family residence with a pool and a three-car garage. The subject property is located at 15110 Eastwood Trail, Brooksville, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,402 square feet of heated building area on a 23,175-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1991 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 22, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $424,681, with an assessed value of $424,681 and a taxable value of $424,681. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $389,158. This request is supported by the average price indicated by making a 15% adjustment to the property appraiser's total sales prices.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PAO-A (19 pages) - Cover page, case synopsis, property record card for the subject including aerial plat, exterior photograph of the subject, sales grid, sales location map, cost of sale analysis, property record card for each sale including aerial plat and exterior photograph, list of structure area adjustments

Hernando County policy for telephonic hearings requires that the petitioner submit hard copy evidence to the County Clerk's Office no later than seven days before the hearing for review by the special magistrate. Although it appears that the petitioner transmitted evidence to the Property Appraiser, the Clerk's Office did not receive any such materials. As a result, these documents were not available for presentation during the hearing. The documentary evidence that was properly submitted and admitted at the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (2 pages) - Petition form

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

- PA Sale 1 - 15424 Eastwood Trl, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,036 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1992 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 26,134 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $400,000.

- PA Sale 2 - 15186 Woodbury Rd, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,112 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1988 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 26,875 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $423,500.

- PA Sale 3 - 15247 Dyla Way, Brooksville is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,338 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 21,875 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $550,000.

Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in unadjusted sale price from $400,000 to $550,000. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Adjusted square foot mean and median indications are $166 and $160, respectively. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the property appraiser has adequately considered cost in compliance with Criteria 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 22,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 20%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property – The petitioner has presented no separate sales comparison approach rather has referenced the property appraiser's analysis on page 5 of Exhibit PAO-A. The petitioner notes that making a cost of sale adjustment to the Total Sales Value of $1,373,500 indicates an average adjusted price for the three sales of $389,158 which supports a reduction in assessment.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value. The petitioner testified that no property inspections or photographic evidence has been reviewed in their analysis of the sales data. It does not appear that condition has been appropriately considered by the petitioner.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $340,000 and $467,500, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $424,681 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $148/ SF and $276,250, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $150/ SF and $291,450, overall, above the value indication. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is unsupported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage. However, the Petitioner's sales are not more similar to the subject than the Property Appraiser's. For example;

Property Appraiser Sales Year Built difference: 6 Years

Petitioner Sales' Year Built difference: 13 Years

Property Appraiser Sales Average Size Difference: 1%

Petitioner Sales's Average Size Difference: 4%

Furthermore, in this case, the Property Appraiser indicated that two of the Petitioner's sales are listed as "Repaired Sinkhole" locations, and one represents a property that was renovated after the purchase.

CONCLUSION

The Property Appraiser's sales are more similar to the subject. However, the best market evidence available (Property Appraiser Sales) supports an adjustment to the assessment ($285,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

The subject assessment reflects a value of $115/ SF and $237,891, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $157/ SF and $416,500, overall (considering subject's larger size compared to sales), after COS adjustment. The subject assessment reflects a value of $147/ SF and $423,953, overall. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage. In this case, the Petitioner's sales appear to exhibit reasonably similar characteristics. The sales analysis follows:

CONCLUSION

The Property Appraiser's sales indicated a value of $440,000. The best market evidence available supports an adjustment to the assessment ($370,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $147/ SF and $345,000, overall, after COS adjustment. The subject assessment reflects a value of $138/ SF and $327,782, overall. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. In this case, the Petitioner's sales appear to exhibit reasonably similar characteristics. The sales analysis follows:

CONCLUSION

Both analyses were given equal weight, as each dataset including reasonably similar sales. The Petitioner's sales indicated a value for the subject of $290,000. The Property Appraiser's sales indicated a value of $345,000. The best market evidence available supports an adjustment to the assessment ($320,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $147/ SF and $488,750, overall (considering subject's larger size compared to sales). The subject assessment reflects a value of $144/ SF and $488,718, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

Property Appraiser Sales Average Size Difference: 10%

Petitioner Sales's Average Size Difference: 44%

CONCLUSION

The Property Appraiser's sales are more similar to the subject. The best market evidence available (Property Appraiser Sales) supports the assessment.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $118/ SF and $280,500, overall (considering subject's larger size compared to sales). The subject assessment reflects a value of $104/ SF and $265,947, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage. However, the Petitioner's sales are not more similar to the subject than the Property Appraiser's. For example;

Property Appraiser Sales Year Built difference: 0 Years

Petitioner Sales' Year Built difference: 4 Years

Property Appraiser Sales Average Size Difference: 9-14%

Petitioner Sales's Average Sized Difference: 12%

Furthermore, in this case, the Property Appraiser indicated that one of the Petitioner's sales represents a "Repaired Sinkhole" location.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $145/ SF and $238,000, overall (considering subject's smaller size compared to sales). The subject assessment reflects a value of $131/ SF and $216,696, overall, below the value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage.

In this case, the Petitioner's sales appear relatively similar to the subject based on year built and size. However, per Property Appraiser testimony, one of the sales represents an All Cash flip of a property in poor condition, and another sale was misrepresented regarding sale date (2025 sale).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. CONCLUSION

Both analyses were given equal weight, as each dataset including reasonably similar sales. The Petitioner's sales indicated a value for the subject of $300,000. The Property Appraiser's sales indicated a value of $300,000. The best market evidence available supports an adjustment to the assessment ($300,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $145/ SF and $238,000, overall (considering subject's larger size compared to sales). The subject assessment reflects a value of $129/ SF and $232,060, overall, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is marginally supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage.

In this case, the Petitioner's sales appear relatively similar to the subject based on year built and size. However, per Property Appraiser testimony, one of the sales represents a property purchased in poor condition, then renovated and resold in 2025 for nearly twice its purchase price. Two sales represent "Repaired Sinkhole" locations.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally (CAMA), and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $136/ SF and $297,500, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $126/ SF and $273,818, overall, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is supported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided the subject sale for consideration. The subject sale is also considered in the Property Appraiser's analysis (within the sales data).

CONCLUSION

In this case, the Property Appraiser provided four sales, including the subject sale. The data supported the assessment. The Petitioner provided the subject sale only. The best market evidence available (four sales, including the subject sale), the assessment is supported.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised by either party. The evidence for both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser did not physically show any cost of sale deduction in their analysis for this property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish their presumption of correctness. The Petitioner did not, however, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value nor did the Petitioner prove that the Property Appraiser's just valuation is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property within the same county. The Petitioner did not present competent, substantial evidence to reduce the value below the market value provided by the Property Appraiser. Therefore, the petition is DENIED.

CONCLUSION

Both analyses were given equal weight, as each dataset included very similar sales. The Petitioner's sales indicated a value for the subject of $293,000. The Property Appraiser's sales indicated a value of $317,000. The best market evidence available supports an adjustment to the assessment ($305,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

FINDINGS OF FACT

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE:

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

ADVISORY MEMORANDUM:

A recent memorandum was provided by Stephen J. Keller, Chief Legal Counsel for Property Tax Litigation and VAB Oversight, Florida Department of Revenue, in response to questions/ issues presented by Ms. Sheryl A Edwards, Legal Counsel to the Sarasota County Value Adjustment Board. The Memorandum is dated March 25, 2022.

Subject: Advisory Assistance on Mathematically Correct Methods for Deducting Costs of Sale in the Income Capitalization Approach.

"Exhibits 2 and 3 attached hereto contain statewide summaries showing, for 2020 and 2021, respectively, the cost of sale deductions each county applied in arriving at just valuations and then reported to DOR on Form DR-493. Almost all of Florida's 67 counties, including Sarasota County, reported cost of sale deductions of 15 percent and this has been the accepted standard practice in Florida for several decades.

Given that property appraisers' cost of sale deductions are a long-standing, well-known, and widely accepted practice and are generally made uniformly and across-the-board in accordance with applicable law, such deductions are a professionally accepted appraisal practice, which VABs and their special magistrates must apply as well."

"Consistent with law and professionally accepted appraisal practices, SCPAO has an expressed, professionally accepted policy of making and reporting 15 percent cost of sale deductions in arriving at just valuations under Florida law. Accordingly, in just valuation reviews, the Sarasota County VAB and its special magistrates are compelled by law to correctly apply 15 percent cost of sale deductions without double-counting."

Property Tax Overview Bulletin 11-01, Provided by Steven Keller, Office of General Counsel (Department of Revenue, indicates the following:

FLORIDA DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

PROPERTY TAX INFORMATIONAL BULLETIN

Value Adjustment Board Petitions and the Eighth Criterion

This advisement addresses issues regarding the eighth just valuation criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., which must be properly considered in administrative reviews. The Department's value adjustment board training contains more information on the eighth criterion. This bulletin must be used in conjunction with the training and consistent with law.

Advisement

1. The Department's value adjustment board training and this bulletin supersede prior Department letters OPN 90-0039 (dated August 20, 1990) and OPN 95-0002 (dated January 9, 1995).

2. In accordance with Florida Statutes and applicable case law, applicability of the eighth criterion in subsection 193.011(8), F.S., is not limited to a sales comparison valuation approach or to property that was sold. This bulletin addresses the proper consideration of the eighth criterion in administrative reviews involving the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches to valuation of real property.

3. The eighth criterion must be properly considered in the income capitalization and cost less depreciation approaches. This requires proper consideration of an adjustment for both costs of sale and personal property where appropriate. See subsection 193.011(8), F.S.

4. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment to a value indication developed by the income capitalization or cost less depreciation approach to arrive at just valuation. This adjustment must include any adjustment necessary to exclude the just value of personal property from just valuations of real property.

Analysis

In long-established and accepted practice, Florida property appraisers routinely apply across-the board eighth criterion adjustments in just valuations of real property, without regard to the valuation approach used or whether the property was sold. See Forms DR-493 reported annually by property appraisers, and Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Broward County, 665 So.2d 272 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995) review denied 673 So.2d 30 (Fla. 1996). Also, see Louisville and National Railroad Co. v. Department of Revenue, State of Fla., 736 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir.(Fla.) July 24, 1984). An eighth criterion adjustment made in the just valuation of a single parcel was approved in Roden v. GAC Liquidating Trust, 462 So.2d 92 (Fla. 2nd DCA 1985).

When an actual sale of the property has not occurred, the appraiser must, in arriving at just valuation, place himself or herself in the position of the parties to a hypothetical sale. See Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Dade County, 275 So.2d 4 (Fla. 1973) and Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). The just valuation standards of section 193.011, F.S., which include the eighth criterion, must be properly considered regardless of the valuation approach used and whether the property was sold.

The case of Bystrom v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 416 So.2d 1133 (Fla. 3rd Conclusion DCA 1982) reviewed a 1978 assessment based on 1977 statutes. Later, in 1979, the eighth criterion was amended to add a personal property component. See Chapter 79-334, Laws of Florida. The law on which the long-established operation of the eighth criterion is based has changed substantially since the assessment date in Bystrom.

Conclusion

The eighth criterion must be properly considered in each of the three approaches to valuation. When justified by sufficiently relevant and credible evidence, the Board or special magistrate should make an eighth criterion adjustment in any of the three valuation approaches.

Board attorneys should ensure that all Board members and special magistrates receive a copy of this bulletin. Questions on this bulletin can be sent by e-mail to VAB@dor.state.fl.us.

The DR-493 form (Hernando County), indicates that a 15% adjustment should be made for the subject's use code.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Therefore, the Property Appraiser has failed to establish a presumption of correctness. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

HEARING SUMMARY

The subject is a single-family residence.

PROPERTY APPRAISER PRESENTATION

The Property Appraiser provided a sales analysis report, containing three sales of similar single-family residences that closed in 2024. Each of the sales are in the same or similar neighborhood to the subject. The subject, as well as the comparables are presented and analyzed on "Adjusted Square Footage".

The sales indicate adjusted values (adjusted 15% for Cost of Sale/ COS, per Department of Revenue/ DOR requirements) of approximately $132/ SF and $340,000, overall. The subject assessment reflects a value of $141/ SF and $370,068, overall, above value indication, after COS adjustment. Therefore, based on this sales data, the subject assessment is unsupported.

PETITIONER PRESENTATION

The Petitioner provided several sales for consideration. The Petitioner's sales data is analyzed based on total square footage, while the Property Appraiser's analysis is based on adjusted square footage. However, the Petitioner's sales are not more similar to the subject than the Property Appraiser's. For example;

Property Appraiser Sales Year Built difference: 1 Year

Petitioner Sales' Year Built difference: 17 Years

Property Appraiser Sales Average Size Difference: 3-5%

Petitioner Sales's Average Sized Difference: 5%

Furthermore, in this case, the Property Appraiser indicated that all of the Petitioner's sales represent smaller homes, with respect to living area.

CONCLUSION

The Property Appraiser's sales are more similar to the subject. However, the best market evidence available (Property Appraiser Sales) supports an adjustment to the assessment ($345,000).

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The evidence submitted by the Property Appraiser and Petitioner is deemed relevant, credible and admissible with no objections raised. The evidence for the both parties was admitted.

The Property Appraiser indicates that the cost of sale is accounted for internally, using their CAMA system, and has been considered. However, in this case, the Property Appraiser did not present competent, substantial evidence showing that the Property Appraiser applied the 15% cost of sale deduction reflected in their DR-493 form (Hernando County) for the subject property. Based upon the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing, the Petitioner did prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the Property Appraiser's just value does not represent just value. Petitioner then proved just value by competent, substantial evidence and the new value is established. Therefore, the petition is GRANTED.

Petition No. 25-081

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: SFR ACQUISITIONS I LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 00427023

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of SFR ACQUISITIONS I LLC on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $355,877. The assessed value is $352,000 and the taxable value is $352,000. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $301,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-323-17-5210-1406-0030. The subject property is located at 2334 Danforth Rd in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2005. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,358 square feet of adjusted building area on a 12,000 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 04/06/22 to complete a sales review.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 18 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject aerial photo, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and a comparable photo.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PAO Sale #1 was built in 2005 and has 2,913 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $395,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $392,017.
PAO Sale #2 was built in 2005 and has 2,288 adjusted square feet on a 13,915 square foot lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $415,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $395,792. This sale is the only one that has a pool like the subject.
PAO Sale #3 was built in 1988 and has 2,563 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $370,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $362,399.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal.

Adjusted sales prices range from $362,399 to $395,792 with a median of $392,017 and a mean of $383,403 ($149.65/SF). After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $325,892 or approximately $127.20/SF.

The PAO sales reflect a value of $127.20 x 2358 (ASQFT) or $299,938.

The subject's just value reflects a value of $150.92/SF and $355,877.

The PAO and Petitioner have 1 sale in common.

The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The living area reported by the Petitioner (1,856) is not consistent with the living area as reported in the subject's Property Record Card (2,035). The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PET Sale #1 was built in 1997 and has 1,657 square feet of living area on a 12,510 square foot lot. The property sold in July 2024 for $340,000. This sale has a pool, like the subject.
PET Sale #2 was built in 2000 and has 1,721 square feet of living area on an 11,116 square foot lot. The property sold in December 2024 for $330,000.

PET Sale #3 was built in 2005 and has 1,976 square feet of living area on a 13,915 square foot lot. The property sold in August 2024 for $415,000. This sale has a pool, like the subject.

The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%. After correction for the inconsistent living area, the adjusted sales prices range from $365,088 to $418,808 with a median of $365,867 and a mean of $383,252. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $325,764 or approximately $182.38/SF.
The Petitioner sales reflect a value for the subject of $182.38 x 2,035 or $371,143.

Both sets of sales were considered credible.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 13%.

7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 15%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID NOT establish a presumption of correctness by failing to apply the COS adjustment derived from the PAO sales or the DR-493, therefore failing to comply with Criterion 8 of 193.011, F.S. The Petitioner DID NOT provide sufficient evidence to support a reduction in value.

2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the Petitioner must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. Based on the sales provided by the Petitioner, the Just Value was supported, therefore, the Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	$299,938
Petitioner	$371,143
Average	$335,540
Assessment (Just Value)	$355,877

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence supporting the existing value. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Denied.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: HP FLORIDA I LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 00944713

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of HP FLORIDA I LLC on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $320,482. The assessed value is $320,482 and the taxable value is $320,482. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $294,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R10-223-17-1424-0000-0610. The subject property is located at 4319 Cavehill Rd in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 1990. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,266 square feet of adjusted building area (1,862 square feet of living area) on a 11,053 square foot residential lot and has a screen enclosed inground pool. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 09/23/24 in order to Adjusted PV1 and EC5/CDK for VAB.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 19 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject front and aerial photos, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and comparable photos.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparables sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

   The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
   PAO Sale #1 was built in 1987 and has 2,094 adjusted square feet on an 8,832 square feet lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $310,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $304,384. This sale lacks the subject's pool amenity.
   PAO Sale #2 was built in 1987 and has 2,221 adjusted square feet on a 12,167 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $353,700 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $340,361.
   PAO Sale #3 was built in 1991 and has 2,343 adjusted square feet on an 8,794 square foot lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $370,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $351,635.

   The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $304,384 to $351,635 with a median of $340,361 and a mean of $332,127. After adjusting downward 17% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $275,665 or approximately $124.14/SF.

   The PAO sales reflect a value for the subject of $121.14/SF x 2,266 (ASQFT) or $281,301. The subject assessment reflects a value of $141.43/SF or $320,482, which is not supported after the COS is applied.

   The PAO and Petitioner have 1 sale in common: Sale #2 for the PAO and Sale #3 for the Petitioner.

   The Petitioner supplied 4 improved sales in the subject's market area:
   PET Sale #1 was built in 1985 and has 1,604 square feet of living area on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $315,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $331,742.

PET Sale #2 was built in 1991 and has 1,946 square feet of living area on a 9,570 square foot lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $339,500 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $336,673.
PET Sale #3 was built in 1987 and has 1,861 square feet of living area on a 12,167 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $353,700 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $356,066.
PET Sale #4 was built in 1988 and has 1,730 square feet of living area on a 9,887 square foot lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $346,500 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $356,156.

The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%.

Adjusted sales prices range from $331,742 to $356,156 with a median of $346,370 and a mean of $345,159. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 4 sales indicate a mean of $293,385 or approximately $165.12/SF. All of the Petitioner's sales have a pool.

The Petitioner sales reflect a value of $165.12/SF x 1,862 (LA) or $307,453.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.

6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 13%.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 17%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID NOT establish a presumption of correctness by failing to apply the COS adjustment derived from the PAO sales or the DR-493, therefore failing to comply with Criterion 8 of 193.011, F.S. The Petitioner DID provide sufficient evidence to support a reduction in value.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	$281,301
Petitioner	$307,453
Average	$294,377
Assessment (Just Value)	$320,482

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value in the record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice. Accordingly, remand under Rule 12D-9.027 is not required.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be GRANTED and revised to $294,000.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: SFR JV 2 2022 1 BORROWER LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 01604892

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of SFR JV 2 2022 1 BORROWER LLC on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $369,874. The assessed value is $369,874 and the taxable value is $369,874. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $325,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R35-223-18-3708-0080-0130. The subject property is located at 1009 Nodding Shade Dr in Brooksville, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2006. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,965 square feet of adjusted building area on a 6,517 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 09/22/25 to update the photo and sketch.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 16 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject front and aerial photos, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and comparable photos.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparables sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PAO Sale #1 was built in 2006 and has 2,495 adjusted square feet on a 5,500 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $359,900 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $354,417.
PAO Sale #2 was built in 2007 and has 3,074 adjusted square feet on a 10,771 square foot lot. The property sold for $490,000 in October 2024 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $460,476. This property is located in a competing neighborhood with larger site sizes and this property has a pool.
PAO Sale #3 was built in 2010 and has 2,565 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. The property sold for $400,000 in August 2024 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $392,404. This property is located in the same neighborhood as Sale #2 and has a larger site.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $354,417 to $460,476 with a median of $392,904 and a mean of $402,432. After adjusting downward 20% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $321,946 or approximately $118.62/SF.

The PAO sales reflect a value for the subject of $118.62/SF x 2,965 (ASQFT) or $351,708. The subject's assessment reflects a value of $124.75/SF or $369,874, which is not supported after the COS is applied.

The PAO and Petitioner have 1 sale in common- PAO Sale #1 and PET Sale #3.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were located in the subject's subdivision
PET Sale #1 was built in 2006 and has 2,515 square feet of living area on a 5,600 square foot lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $372,500 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $382,436.

PET Sale #2 was built in 2006 and has 2,665 square feet of living area on a 5,500 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $365,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $365,365.
PET Sale #3 was built in 2006 and has 2,207 square feet of living area on a 5,500 square foot lot. The property sold in May 2024 for $359,900 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $389,670.

The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%.

Adjusted sales prices range from $365,365 to $389,670 with a median of $382,436 and a mean of $379,157. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $322,283 or approximately $131.95/SF.

The Petitioner's sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of $131.95/SF x 2,665 (LA) or $351,646.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant, however, the PAO sales feature 2 sales from a different neighborhood and one sale with a pool while the Petitioner's sales were all from the same neighborhood and featured only differences for bedroom/bath count and living area.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extras features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation

Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.

6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 16%.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 20%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID NOT establish a presumption of correctness by failing to apply the COS adjustment derived from the PAO sales or DR-493, therefore failing to comply with Criterion 8 of 193.011, F.S. The Petitioner DID provide sufficient evidence to support a reduction in value.

2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	$351,708
Petitioner	$351,647
Average	$351,668
Assessment (Just Value)	$369,874

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5) and (6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value in the record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice. Accordingly, remand under Rule 12D-9.027 is not required.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Granted in Part and the Just Value be revised to $351,647.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: INVITATION HOMES 7 FLORIDA LP
PARCEL KEY NO: 01818643

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $337,309. The assessed value is $337,309 and the taxable value is $337,309. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $317,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-223-18-3743-0000-0480. The subject property is located at 393 Rain Lily Ave in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2024. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,807 square feet of adjusted building area (2,584 living area) on a 5,750 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 04/28/25 to record the improvements as Structure #1.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 15 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject aerial photo, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and Comp #3 photo.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparables sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal.

Adjusted sales prices range from $383,410 to $391,410 with a median of $388,910 and a mean of $387,910 ($138.19/sf). After adjusting downward 13% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $337,482 or approximately $120.23/sf.
The PAO sales reflect a value of $120.23 x 2807 (ASQFT) or $337,486.

The subject assessment reflects a value of $120.17/SF or $337,309, overall, marginally supporting the assessment.

Sale #1 provided by both the PAO and the Petitioner were the same sale.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. One sale was a model match, and the other 2 sales were very similar in living area to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%.

Adjusted sales prices range from $372,796 to $386,549 with a median of $373,140 and a mean of $377,495 ($146.24/sf). After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $320,871 or approximately $124.30/sf.
The Petitioner sales reflect a value of $124.30 x 2,584 (LA) or $321,191.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and as the subject was new construction, no depreciation was calculated for the subject.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 13%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID (marginally) establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	$337,486
Petitioner	$321,191
Average	$329,338
Assessment	$337,309

The assessment is above the value indication, however, is within the range and the PAO provided all model matches while the Petitioner provided only one model match and it was the highest sale of the sales provided. Therefore, the assessment is reasonable, and the petition should be denied.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence supporting the existing just value. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Denied.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: INVITATION HOMES 7 FLORIDA LP
PARCEL KEY NO: 01818331

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $324,866. The assessed value is $324,866 and the taxable value is $324,866. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $305,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-223-18-3743-0000-0170. The subject property is located at 11983 Lavender Loop in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2024. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,625 square feet of adjusted building area on a 6,239 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 04/24/25 to record the improvements as Structure #1.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 15 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject aerial photo, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and comparables photos.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $371,171 to $375,310 with a median of $371,610 and a mean of $372,697. After adjusting downward 10% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $121.60/SF to $122.96/SF with a mean of $122.10/SF. The PAO sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($122.10/SF) $320,513. The subject assessment reflects a value of $123.76/SF and $324,866, overall, marginally supporting the assessment.

The PAO and Petitioner have no sales in common.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%. Adjusted sales prices range from $293,250 to $307,360 with a median of $304,980 and a mean of $301,863. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $122.75 to $128.66 with a mean of $126.36. The Petitioner sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($126.36) $301,874.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.

4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extras features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and as the subject was new construction, no depreciation was calculated for the subject.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 14%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID (marginally) establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	(Median Adjusted Sales Price x 14% COS)	$319,585
Petitioner	(Median Adjusted Sales Prices x 15% COS)	$304,980
Average		$312,283
Assessment		$324,866

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meets the test of relevancy and credibility and constitutes competent and substantial evidence of value in the record. Accordingly, remand under Rule 12D-9.027 is not required.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Granted in Part, and that the 2025 just value be revised to $312,283.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: INVITATION HOMES 7 FLORIDA LP
PARCEL KEY NO: 01818705

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $273,818. The assessed value is $273,818 and the taxable value is $273,818. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $258,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-223-18-3743-0000-0540. The subject property is located at 347 Rain Lily Ave in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2024. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,174 square feet of adjusted building area on a 5,750 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 04/28/25 to record the improvements as Structure #1.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 15 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject aerial photo, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and a photo noting it as Comparable #3 but showing a gate and trailer.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $358,064 to $368,053 with a median of $361,564 and a mean of $362,560. After adjusting downward 25% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $123.53/SF to $126.98/SF with a mean of $125.08/SF. The PAO sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($125.08/SF) $271,924. The subject assessment reflects a value of $125.95/SF and $273,818, overall, marginally supporting the assessment.

The PAO and Petitioner have no sales in common.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. One sale was a model match, and the other 2 sales were very similar in living area to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%. Adjusted sales prices range from $285,000 to $317,870 with a median of $303,870 and a mean of $302,247. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $125.13 to $144.49 with a mean of $135.91. The Petitioner sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($135.91) $263,122.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.

4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and as the subject was new construction, no depreciation was calculated for the subject.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 25%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID (marginally) establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	(Median Adjusted Sales Price x 25% COS)	$271,920
Petitioner	(Median Adjusted Sales Price x 15% COS)	$263,122
Average		$267,521
Assessment		$273,818

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Granted in Part, and that the 2025 just value be revised to $267,521.

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $322,461. The assessed value is $322,461 and the taxable value is $322,461. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $297,000.

The subject property is located at 302 Rain Lily Ave in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2024. Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. Adjusted sales prices range from $366,510 to $375,310 with a median of $371,171 and a mean of $370,997. After adjusting downward 13% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $121.47/SF to $124.39/SF with a mean of $122.96/SF. The PAO sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($122.96/SF) $322,770. The subject assessment reflects a value of $122.84/SF and $322,461, overall, marginally supporting the assessment.

The PAO and Petitioner have no sales in common.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%. Adjusted sales prices range from $345,000 to $349,900 with a median of $349,900 and a mean of $348,267. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $122.75 to $124.50 with a mean of $123.92. The Petitioner sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($123.92) $296,045.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.

4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and as the subject was new construction, no depreciation was calculated for the subject.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 13%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID (marginally) establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	(Median Adjusted Sales Price x 13% COS)	$322,767
Petitioner	(Median Adjusted Sales Prices x 15% COS)	$296,027
Average		$309,397
Assessment		$322,461

The assessment is above the value indication, however, is within the range, therefore, the assessment is reasonable, and the petition should be denied.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Denied.

Petition No. 25-095

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: INVITATION HOMES 7 FLORIDA LP
PARCEL KEY NO: 01803631

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $322,976. The assessed value is $322,976 and the taxable value is $322,976. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $304,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-223-18-3742-0000-1800. The subject property is located at 86 Rose Bud Ln in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2024. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,625 square feet of adjusted building area on a 4,888 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 03/25/25 to record the improvements as Structure #1.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 19 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject front and aerial photos, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and comparables photos.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $357,160 to $358,660 with a median of $357,160 and a mean of $357,660. After adjusting downward 10% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $122.45/SF to $122.97/SF with a mean of $122.62/SF. The PAO sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($122.62/SF) $321,878. The subject assessment reflects a value of $123.04/SF and $322,976, overall, marginally supporting the assessment.

Sales #2 and #3 provided by both the PAO and the Petitioner were the same sales.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area. All sales were a model match to the subject and were located in the subject's subdivision within one mile from the subject. The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%. Adjusted sales prices range from $349,900 to $358,600 with a median of $358,600 and a mean of $355,700. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a range of $124.50 to $127.59 with a mean of $126.56. The Petitioner sales indicate a credible and reliable just value for the subject of ($126.56) $302,352.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.

4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extras features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and as the subject was new construction, no depreciation was calculated for the subject.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 10%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID (marginally) establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	(Median Adjusted Sales Price x 10% COS)	$321,444
Petitioner	(Median Adjusted Sales Prices x 15% COS)	$304,810
Average		$313,127
Assessment		$322,976

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Granted in Part, and that the 2025 just value be revised to $313,127.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-223-18-3742-0000-1760. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 41 Rain Lily Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,619 square feet of adjusted building area on a 4,800-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2024 and are described as average quality in new condition. Based on an inspection of the property on March 26, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements have an effective age of 1 year, considering construction quality and condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $322,076, with an assessed value of $322,076 and a taxable value of $322,076. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $310,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through

comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 128 Rain Lily Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,619 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 4,800 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $359,900. This sale indicates a price of $137 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 125 Rose Bud Lane, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,619 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 4,400 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $362,400. This sale indicates a price of $138 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 11566 Lavender Loop, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,619 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 5,668 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $363,400. This sale indicates a price of $138 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $137 to $138 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $138 per square foot and $138 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 12 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on March 26,2025. An effective age of 1 year has been estimated by the property appraiser based on an analysis of chronological age, condition and construction quality. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 11%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 128 Rain Lily Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,280 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 4,800 square foot residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $359,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $310,688 in comparison with the subject. This comparable sale was utilized by both the Property Appraiser (PA Sale #1) and the Petitioner in their respective analyses of the subject property.

• PET Sale 2 - 117 Rain Lily Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,280 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 5,100 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $360,100. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $310,793 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 148 Rose Bud Lane, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,389 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 4,888 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $349,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $255,203 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented three sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $255,203 to $310,793. The indicated median price is $310,688. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $310,000 just value for the subject property. The petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, the sizes of two of the three sales are incorrect and reconciling to the median price of three sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner has made errors in the size of the subject and two of the three sales that significantly impact analysis results.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $305,915 and $308,890, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $308,890 calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be GRANTED to a revised just value of $308,890.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 2 2022 1 BORROWER, LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R09-223-18-3603-0020-0440. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 13777 Covey Run Place, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 3,047 square feet of adjusted building area on a 7,200-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2016 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $334,856, with an assessed value of $334,856 and a taxable value of $334,856. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $313,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 3823 Bramblewood Loop, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,788 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2017 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 8 years. The home is situated on an 8,568 square foot residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $350,000. This sale indicates a price of $125 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 125 Rose Bud Lane, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,785 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 11 years. The home is situated on a 6,600 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $364,000. This sale indicates a price of $130 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 11566 Lavender Loop, Spring Hill is described as a 5-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,847 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 5 years. The home is situated on an 8,111 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $399,000. This sale indicates a price of $139 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $125 to $139 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $131 per square foot and $130 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 10 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer’s closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 18%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property’s assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser’s determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 4032 Bramblewood Loop, Spring Hill is described as a 1,278 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 7 years. The home is situated on a 6,600 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $375,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $324,701 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 13468 Haverhill Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 1,154 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 13 years. The home is situated on a 6,600 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $364,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $321,019 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 3640 Beaumont Loop, Spring Hill is described as a 1,443 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a 6,600 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $365,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $307,451 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 13443 Haverhill Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2,366 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 18 years. The home is situated on a 7,020 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $350,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $255,884 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 13293 Mandalay Pl, Spring Hill is described as a 1,609 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 19 years. The home is situated on a 7,373 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $275,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $223,297 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $223,297 to $324,701. The indicated median price is $313,000. These sales took place from July 2024 to December 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $313,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, the sizes of four of the five sales are incorrect and reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner has made errors in the size of the subject and four of the five sales that significantly impact analysis results.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $297,500 and $339,150, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $334,856 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2020 1 BORROWER, LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5200-1348-0120. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 13197 Pendleton Street, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,763 square feet of adjusted building area on a 17,921-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2015 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on January 29, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $269,755, with an assessed value of $238,599 and a taxable value of $238,599. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $237,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 13023 Lola Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,823 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1986 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 23 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $279,000. This sale indicates a price of $151 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 12154 Rockford St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,950 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 12 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $324,000. This sale indicates a price of $165 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 6442 Grapewood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,895 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 15 years. The home is situated on a 13,922 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $300,000. This sale indicates a price of $156 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $151 to $165 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $157 per square foot and $156 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 9 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on January 29,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 18%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 6442 Grapewood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,655 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 20 years. The home is situated on a 13,922 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $300,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $262,684 in comparison with the subject. This comparable sale was utilized by both the Property Appraiser (PA Sale #3) and the Petitioner in their respective analyses of the subject property.

• PET Sale 2 - 13304 Brewster Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,608 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2003 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a 16,579 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $300,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $257,675 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 13097 Hanley Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 1-bathroom 1,608 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 23 years. The home is situated on a 14,241 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $245,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $217,926 in comparison with the subject. The property appraiser reports that this is a repaired sinkhole property.

• PET Sale 4 - 13026 Lawrence St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,598 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1989 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 11,734 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $230,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $198,641 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $198,641 to $262,684. The indicated median price is $237,801. These sales took place from May 2024 to September 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $237,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, one of the properties is a repaired sinkhole property, most of the sales are much older than the subject and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser’s data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $237,150 and $275,400, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $269,755 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2021 1 BORROWER, LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5160-1003-0100. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 11351 Sagamore Street, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,055 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,738-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2021 and are described as average quality in good condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $299,742, with an assessed value of $299,742 and a taxable value of $299,742. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $282,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 10524 Thornberry Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,433 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 11,466 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $357,500. This sale indicates a price of $145 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 14034 Sullivan St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,481 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2000 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $329,000. This sale indicates a price of $131 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 11291 Homeway St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,272 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2021 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 4 years. The home is situated on a 14,888 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $385,000. This sale indicates a price of $168 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $131 to $168 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $148 per square foot and $145 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 5 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 15%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 11281 Salters St, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,498 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1986 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 29 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $260,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $243,438 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 11308 Sagamore St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,491 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 34 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $324,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $284,370 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 11212 Roman St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,686 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2025 for $340,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $289,495 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 11234 Leland St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,875 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1986 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 32 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $268,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $235,370 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 3485 Chadwick Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,776 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1990 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 21 years. The home is situated on a 10,389 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2025 for $338,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $282,326 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $235,370 to $289,495. The indicated median price is $282,326. These sales took place from March 2024 to January 2025. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $282,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, the buildings are one story and much smaller than the subject, these properties are all much older than the subject and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $279,650 and $327,250, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $299,742 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Thias Claret Espinoza Cardenas on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R31-223-18-3501-0000-6570. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 10353 Velvetseed Circle, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,037 square feet of adjusted building area on a 11,026-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2003 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on March 5, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $307,200, with an assessed value of $307,200 and a taxable value of $256,478. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $255,000. This request is supported by the recent sale price of the subject property adjusted downward by 15% for cost of sale.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 10353 Velvetseed Cir, Spring Hill is the subject property. This property sold in July 2024 for $300,000. This sale indicates a price of $146 per square foot.

• PA Sale 2 - 10267 Velvetseed Cir, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,059 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $335,000. This sale indicates a price of $161 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 1311 Masada Ln, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,925 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1996 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 24 years. The home is situated on a 11,942 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $289,000. This sale indicates a price of $149 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 4 - 1013 Green Turf Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,041 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1995 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 25 years. The home is situated on a 10,689 square foot residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $364,000. This sale indicates a price of $171 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Four qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $146 to $171 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $157 per square foot and $155 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 10 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on March 5,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 16%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The petitioner has only presented the acquisition of the subject property in support of their revision to the just valuation. The acquisition occurred in July 2024 at a purchase price of $300,000. The petitioner has adjusted this sale price downward by 15% resulting in a value recommendation of $255,000. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner as market support for a $255,000 just value for the subject property. In Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 (Fla. 1989), the Florida Supreme Court held that property appraisers must comply with section 193.011, Florida Statutes, by considering all eight factors when determining the just value of a property for ad valorem taxation. The court found: 1. Comprehensive Valuation: the sale price of a property wall relevant cannot be the sole factor in determining just value. Appraisers must evaluate all statutory factors, including the property's highest and best use, location, condition, income earning potential, and other market related considerations. 2. Sale price is not conclusive: sale price alone may not accurately reflect fair market value due to factors like market anomalies or unique transaction conditions. 3. Statutory Compliance: failure to consider all required factors violates the Florida law and undermines the equitable assessment of property values. Based on the evidence presented, the petitioner has not demonstrated adequate consideration of the statutory factors required under section 193.011(1), Florida Statutes.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $245,650 and $309,400, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $307,200 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Michael Dunn on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5100-0633-0190. This property is described as a single-family residence with a pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 11478 Deep Creek Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,306 square feet of adjusted building area on a 26,003-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2000 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 22, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $349,816, with an assessed value of $349,816 and a taxable value of $299,094. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $319,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 – Is a confidential listing that should not be used as a comparable sale in a public VAB Hearing because it can not be rebutted by the other party without the ability to fully consider the property. It is described on the property record card as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,311 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 22,066 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $395,000. This sale indicates a price of $169 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 11290 Corinthian St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,955 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 22,616 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $365,000. This sale indicates a price of $182 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 12280 Deep Creek Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,238 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 28 years. The home is situated on a 21,875 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $415,000. This sale indicates a price of $177 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $169 to $182 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $176 per square foot and $177 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 9 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 22,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 28%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 1406 Fayetteville Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,871 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 25,863 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $365,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $319,005 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 11475 Stoneville Ct, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,808 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 32 years. The home is situated on a 20,352 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $334,000.

Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, no pool, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $315,840 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 3 - 1317 Finland Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,865 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 26 years. The home is situated on a 26,352 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $360,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $314,273 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 4 - 12193 Glancy Ln, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,990 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 32 years. The home is situated on a 25,542 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $459,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $394,149 in comparison with the subject. This market evidence does not support a reduction in just value.

- PET Sale 5 - 11290 Corinthian St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,955 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 22,616 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $365,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $319,360 in comparison with the subject. This comparable sale was utilized by both the Property Appraiser (PA Sale #2) and the Petitioner in their respective analyses of the subject property.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $314,273 to $394,149 bracketing the property appraiser's just value. The indicated median price is $319,005. These sales took place from April 2024 to November 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $319,000 just value for the subject property. The petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices, and the property appraiser's just value falls within the adjusted price range of the sales presented by the petitioner.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, excluding the confidential sale, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $310,250 and $352,750, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated. This is further supported by PET Sale 4.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $349,816 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Kurt Lowe TTEE Life Estate on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R12-223-16-2010-0410-0090. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 4485 Gulfstream Drive, Hernando Beach, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 4,259 square feet of adjusted building area on a 7,500-square-foot waterfront residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2000 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on March 19, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements have an effective age of 13 years, considering construction quality and condition. The subject property was not sold within the 12 months preceding the valuation date; however, it was purchased in Jun-2021 for $729,000.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $925,797, with an assessed value of $925,797 and a taxable value of $875,075. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $675,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 4107 Lily Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 3,464 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1997 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 22 years. The home is situated on a 7,900 square foot waterfront residential lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $900,000. This sale indicates a price of $256 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 4372 6th Isle Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 3,656 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2020 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 5 years. The home is situated on a 7,588 square foot waterfront residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $1,090,000. This sale indicates a price of $286 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 4339 Biscayne Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 3,469 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2019 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 6 years. The home is situated on a 7,366 square foot waterfront residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $1,025,000. This sale indicates a price of $280 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $256 to $286 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $274 per square foot and $280 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 11 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on March 19,2024. An effective age of 13 years has been estimated by the property appraiser based on an analysis of chronological age, condition and construction quality. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 16%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 3233 Nassau Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,524 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 7,509 square foot residential waterfront lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $745,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $622,518 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 4374 8th Isle Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,344 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 32 years. The home is situated on a 7,304 square foot residential waterfront lot. This property sold in March 2025 for $750,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area, and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $638,987 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 4375 7th Isle Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,412 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 26 years. The home is situated on a 7,304 square foot residential waterfront lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $735,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $622,769 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 4375 Biscayne Dr, Hernando Beach is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,507 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 32 years. The home is situated on an 8,317 square foot residential waterfront lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $635,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $527,168 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $527,168 to $638,987. The indicated median price is $622,644. These sales took place from June 2024 to March 2025. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $675,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner has made errors in the size of the subject and three of the four sales that significantly impact analysis results.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. The two higher-priced sales relied on by the property appraiser involve dwellings constructed more than twenty years after the subject. Of those, PAO Sale 1, at $900,000, represents the most comparable indicator of value. The four sales submitted by the petitioner involve smaller homes built more than thirteen years earlier than the subject and collectively establish the lower end of the value range. Based on the sales evidence in the record, and applying a 15 percent adjustment for cost of sale, the indicated range spans from $539,750 to $765,000. This range supports the conclusion that the current just value is overstated. Given similarities in location, size, age, and condition, PAO Sale 1 provides the most reliable benchmark. Accordingly, it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value be revised to $765,000, calculated as follows:

$900,000 (most similar sale) x 0.85 (cost of sale adjustment) = $765,000 (revised just value)

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $765,000.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Jerome Wayne Valentine, Embry Laverne on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R26-222-17-2291-0240-0070. This property is described as a single-family residence with a pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 7438 Abington Way, Weeki Wachee, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,682 square feet of adjusted building area on a 11,443-square-foot residential waterfront lot. The improvements were constructed in 1982 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 23, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $239,438, with an assessed value of $239,438 and a taxable value of $239,438. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $205,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 8441 Dunnellon Rd, Weeki Wachee is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,991 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1995 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 28 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $265,000. This sale indicates a price of $132 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 7531 Dundee Way, Weeki Wachee is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,779 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 27 years. The home is situated on a 8,800 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $242,500. This sale indicates a price of $135 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 9039 Lingrove Rd, Weeki Wachee is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,692 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 34 years. The home is situated on a 10,190 square foot waterfront residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $260,000. This sale indicates a price of $145 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $132 to $145 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $137 per square foot and $135 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 7 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 23,2025. Evidence of building permits for renovations and/or significant building repairs has been presented. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 23%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 7430 Abington Way, Weeki Wachee is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,202 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1983 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 37 years. The home is situated on a 10,300 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $235,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $205,616 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 8691 Heather Blvd, Weeki Wachee is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,050 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 44 years. The home is situated on a 10,347 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $240,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $228,515 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 3 - 7424 Glasgow Rd, Weeki Wachee is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,554 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1981 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 37 years. The home is situated on a 11,260 square foot residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $245,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $200,098 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented three sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $200,098 to $228,515. The indicated median price is $205,616. These sales took place from February 2024 to October 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $205,000 just value for the subject property. The petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and reconciling to the median price of three sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $206,125 and $225,250, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $225,250 calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph §194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;
2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or
3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $225,250.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 2 2023 1 BORROWER, LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5220-1491-0090. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 9358 Mallard Street, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,317 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,435-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2018 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 23, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $322,933, with an assessed value of $322,933 and a taxable value of $322,933. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $297,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 11105 Norvell Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,258 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as superior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $361,900. This sale indicates a price of $159 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 11080 Sedgefield Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,251 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2017 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 8 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $358,000. This sale indicates a price of $157 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 13436 Barlington St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,819 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 7 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $320,000. This sale indicates a price of $174 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $157 to $174 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $163 per square foot and $159 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 7 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 23,2025. Evidence of building permits for renovations and/or significant building repairs has been presented. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer’s closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 15%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property’s assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser’s determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 4985 Kirkwood Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,250 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 18 years. The home is situated on a 12,500 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $336,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $272,087 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 9499 Northcliff Blvd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,978 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2021 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 4 years. The home is situated on a 15,213 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $355,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $290,914 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 5256 Frost Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,178 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 2003 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 10,960 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $380,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $304,417 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 9280 Swiss Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,886 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1982 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 20 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $380,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $322,500 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $272,087 to $322,500. The indicated median price is $297,666. These sales took place from February 2024 to October 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $297,000 just value for the subject property. The petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, the sales are much old and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and significant price adjustments were required to reconcile these sales to the subject, despite the petitioner's assertion that they are more comparable than those presented by the property appraiser.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $272,000 and $307,615, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $307,615 calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph §194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;
2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or
3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $307,615.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2021 1 BORROWER LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5170-1077-0040. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 4442 Dior Road, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,915 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,000-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2021 and are described as average quality in good condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 30, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $279,839, with an assessed value of $279,839 and a taxable value of $279,839. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $263,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 10449 Cranston St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,011 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2023 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 2 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $350,000. This sale indicates a price of $173 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 11294 Roland St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,071 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 1 year. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $353,000. This sale indicates a price of $169 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 5089 Tanner Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,121 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2017 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 8 years. The home is situated on a 8,560 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $377,500. This sale indicates a price of $177 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $169 to $177 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $173 per square foot and $173 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 7 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 30,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 17%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 4376 Tiffin Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,743 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 19 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $329,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $281,983 in comparison with the subject. This market evidence does not support a reduction in just value.

• PET Sale 2 - 4444 Devonshire Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,887 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1992 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 28 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $275,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area, and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $231,112 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 12020 Cavern Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,812 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 19 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $314,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, pool, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $263,752 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented three sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $231,112 to $281,983 bracketing the property appraiser's just value. The indicated median price is $263,752. These sales took place from April 2024 to December 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $263,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, these properties are much older than the subject and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, reconciling to the median price of three sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices, and the property appraiser's just value falls within the price range of the sales presented by the petitioner.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser’s data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $297,500 and $320,875, all greater than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $279,839 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of HPA Borrower 2017-1 LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5200-1350-0040. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 6472 Grapewood Rd, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 3,220 square feet of adjusted building area on a 13,358-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2004 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on February 9, 2023, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $370,717, with an assessed value of $323,392 and a taxable value of $323,392. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $278,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 3211 Greynolds Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,923 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 30 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $375,000. This sale indicates a price of $120 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 12236 Verona St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,684 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 13 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $407,500. This sale indicates a price of $143 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 13093 Drysdale St, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,933 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 29 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $280,000. This sale indicates a price of $144 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $120 to $144 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $135 per square foot and $143 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 9 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on February 9,2023. Evidence of building permits for renovations and/or significant building repairs has been presented. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer’s closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 18%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property’s assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser’s determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

- PET Sale 1 - 13169 Pendleton St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,411 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1995 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 25 years. The home is situated on a 11,613 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $315,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $255,744 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 2 - 6251 Landover Blvd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,256 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 20 years. The home is situated on a 13,304 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $352,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $302,227 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 3 - 13204 Pendleton St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,245 square foot single-family residence. The size used by the petitioner only represents the ground floor thereby under stating the building area. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 34 years. The home is situated on a 10,995 square foot residential lot. This property sold in July 2024 for $275,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $233,076 in comparison with the subject.

- PET Sale 4 - 13040 Handley Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,646 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 9 years. The home is situated on a 13,766 square foot residential lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $358,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $275,287 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $233,076 to $302,227. The indicated median price is $265,516. These sales took place from February 2024 to September 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $278,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and the sizes of some of these sales are incorrect.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner has made errors in the size of the subject and some of the sales that significantly impact analysis results.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $238,000 and $346,375, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $346,375 calculated as follows:

$407,500 (top of sales range) x 0.85 (cost of sale adjustment) = $346,375 (revised just value)

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $346,375.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 2 2022 1 BORROWER, LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R10-223-18-3604-0330-0010. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 14556 Edgemere Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,824 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,722-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2006 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $351,930, with an assessed value of $351,930 and a taxable value of $351,930. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $298,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 5282 Brackenwood Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,787 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 11,794 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $376,200. This sale indicates a price of $134 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 14848 Edgemere Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,813 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 9 years. The home is situated on a 7,700 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $390,000. This sale indicates a price of $138 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 5744 Brackenwood Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,787 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a three-car garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a 10,800 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $395,000. This sale indicates a price of $139 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $134 to $139 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $137 per square foot and $138 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 12 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2025. Evidence of building permits for renovations and/or significant building repairs has been presented. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer’s closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 12%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property’s assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. In reviewing the evidence presented by the property appraiser at this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser did not appropriately consider the factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011; therefore, the presumption of correctness has not been established.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser’s determination is incorrect. If the property appraiser establishes the presumption of correctness, it is the petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 4279 Blakemore Pl, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,307 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 11,074 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $355,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $312,108 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 4243 Blakemore Pl, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,171 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2008 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 10,895 square foot residential lot. This property sold in September 2024 for $315,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $282,035 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 14649 Deacon Ct, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,472 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 19 years. The home is situated on a 11,855 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $350,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $298,686 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 13606 Fairdale Ln, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,422 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2007 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 16 years. The home is situated on a 9,900 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $400,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $335,030 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 13759 Blythewood Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,053 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2019 and is represented as superior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 6 years. The home is situated on a 10,527 square foot residential lot. This property sold in December 2024 for $318,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $287,534 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $282,035 to $335,030. The indicated median price is $298,686. These sales took place from April 2024 to December 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $298,000 just value for the subject property. The petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner's responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser's evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $319,770 and $335,750, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $335,750 calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph §194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;
2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or
3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $335,750.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2021 1 BORROWER LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5140-0920-0140. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 3305 Irondale Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 1,873 square feet of adjusted building area on a 13,669-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2020 and are described as average quality in good condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 24, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $280,941, with an assessed value of $280,941 and a taxable value of $280,941. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $263,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 11371 Portola Ln, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,799 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2022 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 3 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $320,000. This sale indicates a price of $177 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 13436 Barlington St, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,819 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2018 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 7 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in June 2024 for $320,000. This sale indicates a price of $174 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 12354 Juron St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,079 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 2022 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 3 years. The home is situated on a 12,468 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $350,000. This sale indicates a price of $167 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $167 to $177 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $172 per square foot and $174 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 8 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 24,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 17%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 3259 Lema Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,890 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1982 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 34 years. The home is situated on a 15,380 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $330,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $260,288 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 12815 Linden Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,535 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 2003 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 22 years. The home is situated on a 12,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $270,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $242,362 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 12242 Chastain St, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,760 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1986 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 30 years. The home is situated on an 18,511 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $380,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $297,626 in comparison with the subject. This market evidence does not support a reduction in just value.

• PET Sale 4 - 12294 Elmore Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,830 square foot single-family residence. This home was constructed in 2023 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 2 years. The home is situated on a 12,464 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2024 for $313,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $267,246 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $242,362 to $297,626 bracketing the property appraiser's just value. The indicated median price is $263,767. These sales took place from January 2024 to October 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $263,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, the properties are much older than the subject and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and the property appraiser's just value falls within the price range of the sales presented by the petitioner.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser’s data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $272,000 and $297,500, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $280,941 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner Malcolm Louden with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of HPA Borrower 2018-1 MS LLC on December 9, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of four presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-112, 25-113, 25-119 and 25-159. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5240-1655-0100. This property is described as a single-family residence with a pool and a garage. The subject property is located at 3607 Dothan Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,184 square feet of adjusted building area on a 19,837-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2020 and are described as average quality in good condition. Based on an inspection of the property on December 27, 2024, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements have an effective age of 5 years, considering construction quality and condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $371,231, with an assessed value of $353,508 and a taxable value of $353,508. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $328,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser raised no objection to the admission of the petitioner's evidence into the record at the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 3848 Lema Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,226 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1986 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in April 2024 for $350,000. This sale indicates a price of $149 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 1293 Corolla Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,552 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 21,875 square foot residential site. This property sold in August 2024 for $482,000. This sale indicates a price of $184 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 12193 Glancy Ln, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,353 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 25,542 square foot residential site. This property sold in July 2024 for $459,000. This sale indicates a price of $188 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $149 to $188 per square foot. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 9 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on December 27,2024. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 36%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 14417 Coronado Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,092 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1991 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 15 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in March 2024 for $375,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $337,131 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 13299 Drayton Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,385 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1983 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 33 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in December 2024 for $280,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $292,147 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 13135 Groveland St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,937 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 15 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in May 2024 for $420,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $368,500 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 3032 Fairview Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,891 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1985 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in March 2024 for $350,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $319,321 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $292,147 to $368,500. The indicated median price is $328,226. These sales took place from March 2024 to December 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $328,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, the photographs are from Google, adjustments for condition are based entirely on the age of the improvements, and age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1), it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness due to deficiencies in the analysis of the comparable sales. However, the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject in terms of size, age, location, and property type and located within the same neighborhood. As such, the sales themselves provide a reasonable and credible basis for market analysis despite shortcomings in their presentation.

When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each sale for cost of sale, the comparable sales data in evidence provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in the record, the indicated range, including a 15 percent adjustment for cost of sale, is between $238,000 and $409,700, which brackets the just value of the property and indicates that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $371,231 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner Malcolm Louden with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of Hasaan Qandeel on December 9, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of four presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-112, 25-113, 25-119 and 25-159. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5100-0649-0210. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a three-car garage. The subject property is located at 1224 Finland Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 3,120 square feet of adjusted building area on a 21,875-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2021 and are described as average quality in good condition. Based on an inspection of the property on September 23, 2025, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $449,722, with an assessed value of $449,722 and a taxable value of $399,000. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $394,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser raised no objection to the admission of the petitioner's evidence into the record at the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 1222 Huntington Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 3,370 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in June 2024 for $540,000. This sale indicates a price of $151 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 3028 Coronet Ct, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 3,005 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1990 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in November 2024 for $438,000. This sale indicates a price of $138 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 12265 Folger St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,964 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2024 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 21,875 square foot residential site. This property sold in October 2024 for $479,000. This sale indicates a price of $160 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $138 to $160 per square foot. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 7 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on September 23,2025. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 14%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 1177 Finland Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,661 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 11 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in February 2024 for $475,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $409,739 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 1329 Finland Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,314 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2015 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 10 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in April 2024 for $390,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $349,159 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 1289 Fergason Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,547 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2020 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 5 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in May 2024 for $462,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $394,405 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 1440 Findlay Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,229 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 13 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in August 2024 for $395,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $363,018 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 1647 Alameda Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,268 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 16 years. The home is situated on a residential site. This property sold in September 2024 for $489,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $441,502 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $349,159 to $441,502. The indicated median price is $394,405. These sales took place from February 2024 to September 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $394,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, the photographs are from Google, adjustments for condition are based entirely on the age of the improvements, age adjustments are based on 0.5% per year implying an economic life of 200 years, and reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1), it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness due to deficiencies in the analysis of the comparable sales. However, the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject in terms of size, age, location, and property type and located within the same neighborhood. As such, the sales themselves provide a reasonable and credible basis for market analysis despite shortcomings in their presentation.

When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each sale for cost of sale, the comparable sales data in evidence provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in the record, the indicated range, including a 15 percent adjustment for cost of sale, is between $331,500 and $459,000, which brackets the just value of the property and indicates that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $449,722 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner Malcolm Louden with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2019 1 BORROWER LLC on December 9, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of four presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-112, 25-113, 25-119 and 25-159. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5200-1369-0140. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 7028 Covewood Drive, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,407 square feet of adjusted building area on a 11,485-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1990 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on May 19, 2023, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $271,355, with an assessed value of $244,626 and a taxable value of $244,626. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $253,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

The property appraiser raised no objection to the admission of the petitioner's evidence into the record at the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through

comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 5294 Birchwood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,280 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1988 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in October 2024 for $390,000. This sale indicates a price of $159 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 11560 Sheffield Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,407 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1980 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in June 2024 for $390,000. This sale indicates a price of $153 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 5236 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,373 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1987 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 11,335 square foot residential site. This property sold in October 2024 for $346,500. This sale indicates a price of $145 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $145 to $159 per square foot. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 7 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted “adjusted building area” calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject’s assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser’s value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the “adjusted building area” metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser’s office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on May 19,2023. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 25%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 6417 Grapewood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,986 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2006 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 17 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in April 2024 for $294,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $239,269 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 13059 Siam Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,027 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 14 years. The home is situated on a 11,131 square foot residential site. This property sold in September 2024 for $330,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $256,255 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 12285 Shafton Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,983 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 13 years. The home is situated on a 13,219 square foot residential site. This property sold in August 2024 for $389,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $291,147 per square foot in comparison with the subject. This market evidence does not support a reduction in just value.

• PET Sale 4 - 6191 Silverdale Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,944 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 19 years. The home is situated on a 11,741 square foot residential site. This property sold in December 2024 for $289,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $231,031 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 1214 Landfair St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,108 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2003 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 21 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in August 2024 for $314,900. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $253,243 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented five sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $231,031 to $291,147 bracketing the property appraiser's just value. The indicated median price is $253,243. These sales took place from April 2024 to December 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $253,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, the photographs are from Google, adjustments for condition are based entirely on the age of the improvements, age adjustments are based on 0.5% per year implying an economic life of 200 years, reconciling to the median price of five sales is analytically identical to relying solely on the middle sale, inherently discounting the influence of the any of the other sale prices, and the property appraiser's just value falls within the price range of the sales presented by the petitioner.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1), it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness due to deficiencies in the analysis of the comparable sales. However, the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject in terms of size, age, location, and property type and located within the same neighborhood. As such, the sales themselves provide a reasonable and credible basis for market analysis despite shortcomings in their presentation.

When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each sale for cost of sale, the comparable sales data in evidence provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in the record, the indicated range, including a 15 percent adjustment for cost of sale, is between $246,075 and $331,500, which brackets the just value of the property and indicates that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $271,355 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Irmler, Jane & Irmler, Micaiah

PARCEL KEY NO: 01576798

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Irmler, Jane & Irmler, Micaiah, appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $324,721, an assessed or capped value of $324,721, and a taxable value of $324,721. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $231,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,434 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,738 adjusted SF that was built in 2005. The subject is located at 8515 Pinetop Ridge Lane, Brooksville, FL.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the subject is a 2-story dwelling and the Petitioner's sales grid shows first floor area only of 1,304 SF which is substantially less than the actual heated SF of 2,434 SF. PAO noted that (4) of the Petitioner's sales are one-story dwellings, and that (1) of the (2) 2-story sales is a repaired sinkhole property. As such, adjusted values are skewed due to the incorrect improvement size of the subject in comparison with the one-story sales in particular. The PAO stated that Comp 4 (used by both PAO and Petitioner) is the Petitioner's best comparable. PAO also questioned the price per SF and how it was generated. Petitioner responded that it is system generated, and Petitioner was not aware of the formula the computer utilizes.

Of the sales provided, (5) Petitioner and (1) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $294,202. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $261,375. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $277,789, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $324,721. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from

1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

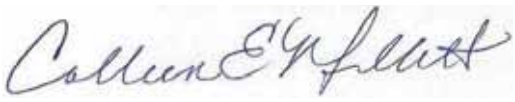
The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.



The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $277,789.

PETITION NO. 25-128

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Juan Valdes

PARCEL KEY NO: 00228685

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Juan Valdes, appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $337,183, an assessed or capped value of $337,183, and a taxable value of $337,183. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $309,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,726 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,970 adjusted SF that was built in 2003. The subject is located at 7617 Pinehurst Drive, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (6) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on the age of the subject improvements and as such, used a 2-mile radius for comparable sales.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The subject is a pool home and of the (6) sales provided, (3) were pool homes. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (6) comparable sales were within a 0.89-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the sales utilized by the Petitioner have a significant age gap in that they were built in the 1970's and 1980's with effective ages ranging from 1985-2004 whereas the subject was built in 2003 with an effective age of 2019. The PAO also noted a discrepancy in size for Comparable #4 which was reported on the grid at 1,359 SF and per PRC is 1,503 SF. PAO also questioned time adjustments and Petitioner responded that the time adjustments are formula based and developed by engineers.

Of the sales provided, (3) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $319,014. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $322,292. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $320,653, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $337,183. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

PETITION NO. 25-129

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Rene Gil

PARCEL KEY NO: 00485148

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Rene Gil, appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $295,667, an assessed or capped value of $245,130, and a taxable value of $245,130. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $281,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,580 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,838 adjusted SF that was built in 2018. The subject is located at 2276 Mariner Blvd, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (4) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal.

The Petitioner provided (4) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (4) comparable sales were within a 0.69-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the (4) sales utilized by the Petitioner were all repaired sinkhole properties wherein the subject is not a repaired sinkhole.

The Petitioner questioned the PAO regarding repaired sinkhole sales to which the PAO responded that there can be a stigma attached to repaired sinkhole homes as those homes often have significant repairs such as underpinning and as such, would tend to represent a reduced value. Thus, it is preferential to use non-repaired sinkhole homes in comparison as the subject is not a repaired sinkhole property.

Of the sales provided, (4) Petitioner and (1) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies) as they are repaired sinkhole properties. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $311,313. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $311,313, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $295,667. This data reliably supports that the subject is NOT over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from

1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

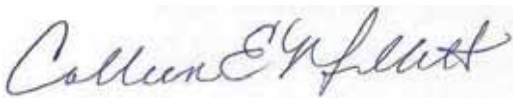
The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be DENIED.

PETITION NO. 25-130

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Binh Tran

PARCEL KEY NO: 01674405

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Binh Tran, appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $310,746, an assessed or capped value of $310,746, and a taxable value of $260,024. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $283,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,753 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,121 adjusted SF that was built in 2017. The subject is located at 3614 Fantasy Way, Brooksville, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO made note that the field review took place in 2025 rather than in 2024 as reported in their case synopsis.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.20-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the Petitioner's comparable sale #4 was a 2025 sale.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $291,934. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $285,203. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $288,569, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $310,746. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

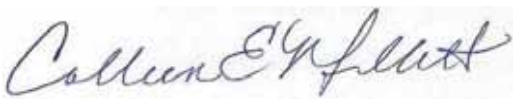
The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $288,569.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-2 2022-1 Borrower LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01570641

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-2 2022-1 Borrower LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $381,636, an assessed or capped value of $381,636, and a taxable value of $381,636. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $230,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,888 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 3,294 adjusted SF that was built in 2006. The subject is located at 14650 Deacon Ct, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on 2-story design and location of the subject within a subdivision for comparable sales.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.51-mile radius and within the same master planned subdivision as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the Petitioner utilized only the first floor living area for the subject on the sales grid; however, the subject is a 2-story home. As such, all adjustments made for differences in living area to comparable sales are incorrect. Additionally, all sales utilized are 1-story homes.

Of the sales provided, (5) Petitioner and (2) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies). All the Petitioner sales were considered unreliable thus, no median for the Petitioner was obtained. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $382,500. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $382,500, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $381,636. This data reliably supports that the subject is NOT over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be DENIED.

PETITION NO. 25-133

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2021-1 Borrower LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01577653

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2021-1 Borrower LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $262,961, an assessed or capped value of $262,961, and a taxable value of $262,961. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $242,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,901 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,199 adjusted SF that was built in 2008. The subject is located at 8436 Indian Laurel Ln, Brooksville, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (4) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on the location of the subject, and all comparable sales are within the same subdivision.

The Petitioner provided (4) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (4) comparable sales were within a 0.43-mile radius and within the same subdivision as the subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence.

Of the sales provided, (0) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $249,936. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $248,483. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $249,209, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $262,961. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

“Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $249,209.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR Acquisitions 2022 LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01104815

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR Acquisitions 2022 LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $422,617, an assessed or capped value of $422,617, and a taxable value of $422,617. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $376,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,108 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,996 adjusted SF that was built in 1988. The subject is located at 13362 Lawrence Street, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on the location of the subject, and all comparable sales are within 0.47 miles.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.80-mile radius of the subject.

The PAO had a rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence and noted that Comp #2 was also utilized by the PAO and that Comp #4 is indicated to have 2,157 SF however, per the PRC it has 1,581 SF – this discrepancy would therefore indicate a large positive adjustment due to the size difference and thus throws off the adjusted value of this comparable sale.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $379,697. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $395,533. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $387,615, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $422,617. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $387,615.

PETITION NO. 25-139

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2020-1 Borrower LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00583684

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Patrick Rodriguez of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2020-1 Borrower LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $261,949, an assessed or capped value of $237,629, and a taxable value of $237,629. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $243,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,768 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,004 adjusted SF that was built in 2005. The subject is located at 12205 Ronald St, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (6) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO utilized sales within the subject's subdivision code that were similar in age to the subject.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (6) comparable sales were within a 0.40-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the Petitioner's comparable sale #2 had condition issues at time of 2024 sale as it was a flip (no condition adjustment was made) and sold in 2025 for $330,000. PAO also noted that comparable sale #3 is a repaired sinkhole property.

Of the sales provided, (2) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date, or repaired sinkhole). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $253,956. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $278,545. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $266,251, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $261,949. This data reliably supports that the subject is not over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (6) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO utilized sales within the subject's subdivision code that were similar in age to the subject.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (6) comparable sales were within a 0.55-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the Petitioner's comparable sale #1 is a repaired sinkhole property, and the subject is not a repaired sinkhole property.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date, or repaired sinkhole). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $298,582. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $331,500. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $315,041, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $331,788. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

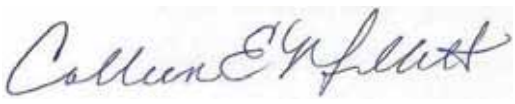
The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $315,041.

PETITION NO. 25-147

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR Borrower 2021-2 LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01157170

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Patrick Rodriguez of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR Borrower 2021-2 LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $342,532, an assessed or capped value of $342,532, and a taxable value of $342,532. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $327,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,974 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,320 adjusted SF that was built in 1992. The subject is located at 6104 Kinlock Ave, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO utilized sales within the subject's subdivision code that were similar in age to the subject.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (2) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.46-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the effective age of the subject is 1999 wherein the Petitioner reports the effective age as 1997. The PAO also indicated that Petitioner's comparable sale #2 is a repaired sinkhole property, and the subject is not a repaired sinkhole property. PAO acknowledged that Petitioner's comparable sale #3 is PAO sale #2 and Petitioner's comparable sale #5 is PAO sale #3.

Special Magistrate noted in reviewing all documentation that the PAO also utilized a repaired sinkhole within their analysis.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (1) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date, or repaired sinkhole). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $313,742. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $327,208. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $320,475, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $342,532. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $320,475.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-2 2022-2 Borrower LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00262682

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Patrick Rodriguez of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-2 2022-2 Borrower LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $361,113, an assessed or capped value of $361,113, and a taxable value of $361,113. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $285,000. Petitioner's estimated just value was amended to $340,000 during hearing due to PAO's rebuttal.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,123 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,358 adjusted SF that was built in 2015. The subject is located at 9241 Sanborn St, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (6) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO utilized a broader distance for sales due to the subject's newer age in an area with older homes.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (6) comparable sales were within a 0.67-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that the subject's heated SF was reported as 1,955 and per PRC should be 2,123 SF. PAO also noted comparable sales #2 and #4 are repaired sinkhole properties, comparable sale #4 improvement size should be 1,552 with an effective age of 2004 and comparable sale #5 has an effective year of 2012 and is a repaired sinkhole.

Petitioner amended their estimated value to $340,000, citing that more weight is placed on comparable sales #1 and #6 due to the PAO's rebuttal.

Of the sales provided, (4) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date, or repaired sinkhole). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $335,105. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $321,583. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $328,344, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $361,113. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $328,344.

Special Magistrate

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: SFR JV 1 2021 1 BORROWER LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 00285391

Petitioner James Thelucian of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of SFR JV 1 2021 1 Borrower LLC on November 17, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack, Residential Supervisor.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 9 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $367,955. The assessed value is $367,840 and the taxable value is $367,840. No change in values after the TRIM process was noted.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $295,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-323-17-5090-0604-0260. The subject property is located at 2304 Lema Dr in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2003. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,370 square feet of adjusted building area on a 15,000 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 09/23/2024 to complete a value adjustment review.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 19 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The packet provided by the Petitioner was admitted into evidence as PET-1 and consisted of 8 pages including a cover page, property summary, subject front and aerial photos, evaluation summary, sales comparables, adjusted sales comparables, comparables map and comparable photos.

Both parties acknowledged that they received the opposing party's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules as outlined in Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and is considered sufficient, relevant and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PAO Sale #1 was built in 2004, has 2,266 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $335,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $332,173.
PAO Sale #2 was built in 1983, has 2,207 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. The property sold in June 2024 for $410,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $389,313. The property record card for this property indicates that it has a screen enclosed inground pool and fireplace.
PAO Sale #3 was built in 2004, has 2,062 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $395,800 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $385,552. The property record card for this property indicates that it has a screen enclosed inground vinyl-lined pool.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (ASQFT). While this methodology is generally considered less reliable in the valuation industry than utilizing heated SF, it is often utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $332,173 to $389,313 with a median of $385,552 and a mean of $369,013. After adjusting downward 23% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $284,140 or approximately $130.89.

The PAO sales reflect a value for the subject of $130.89/SF x 2370 (ASQFT) or $310,209. The subject's assessment reflects a value of $155.26/SF or $367,955, which is not supported after the COS is applied.

The PAO and Petitioner have no sales in common.

The Petitioner supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PET Sale #1 was built in 2003, has 2,198 square feet of living area on a 13,616 square foot lot. This property sold in February 2024 for $360,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $347,121.

PET Sale #2 was built in 2021, has 1,820 square feet of living area on a 14,888 square foot lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $385,000 and the adjusted sales price is $398,955.
PET Sale #3 was built in 2001, has 2,017 square feet of living area on a 14,241 square foot lot. The property was sold in December 2024 for $330,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $330,715.

The Petitioner performed their analysis utilizing heated SF. The Petitioner adjusted the sales provided at a COS rate of 15%. The DR-493 form for Hernando County filed with the Florida Department of Revenue reflects a COS deduction of 15%.

Adjusted sales prices range from $330,715 to $398,955 with a median of $347,121 and a mean of $358,985. After adjusting downward 15% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $310,953 or approximately $153.33/SF.

The Petitioner sales reflect a value of $153.331/SF x 2,028 (LA) or $310,953.

Both sets of sales were considered credible and relevant, however, as Sales #2 and #3 from the PAO have a pool, the sales provided by the Petitioner are more like the subject and would be considered a more reasonable substitute for the subject property by the typical market participant.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extras features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.

6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The property considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 18%.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 23%. The Petitioner has made a deduction for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the PAO to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion. The Special Magistrate will consider these differences when weighing the appropriateness of each party's conclusions and the assessment level.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID NOT establish a presumption of correctness by failing to apply the COS adjustment derived from the PAO sales or the DR-493, therefore failing to comply with Criterion 8 of 193.011, F.S. The Petitioner DID provide sufficient evidence to support a reduction in value.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser	$310,209
Petitioner	$310,953
Average	$310,581
Assessment (Just Value)	$367,955

The assessment is above the range and should be adjusted.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value in the record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice. Accordingly, remand under Rule 12D-9.027 is not required.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be GRANTED IN PART and revised to $310,581.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner James Thelucien with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of SFR JV 1 2021 1 BORROWER LLC on November 20, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of 14 presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-096, -097, -098, -099, -100, -102, -103, -104, -106, -107, -108, -109, -110, and -154. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5010-0050-0090. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 1377 Piper Road, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,197 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,367-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 1980 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on October 17, 2023, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $251,178, with an assessed value of $248,537 and a taxable value of $248,537. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $228,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (10 pages) - Petition, cover page, property summary, aerial photograph and street scene photograph, evaluation summary, sales grid, adjustment grid, comparable location map, street scene photographs of the sales

The property appraiser has not raised any objections to the evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 6166 Newmark St, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,295 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1977 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $304,000. This sale indicates a price of $131 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 7395 Holiday Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,909 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 28 years. The home is situated on a 12,648 square foot residential lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $280,000. This sale indicates a price of $145 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 6072 Airmont Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,014 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a two-car garage. This home was constructed in 1975 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 31 years. The home is situated on a 10,400 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $350,000. This sale indicates a price of $170 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $131 to $170 per square foot. The indicated mean and median prices are $149 per square foot and $145 per square foot, respectively. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 9 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity beyond what is previously been discussed.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on October 17,2023. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 24%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 1359 Newhope Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,654 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1978 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 35 years. The home is situated on a 10,948 square foot residential lot. This property sold in April 2024 for $359,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $299,648 in comparison with the subject. This market evidence does not support a reduction in just value.

• PET Sale 2 - 1321 Ivydale Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 2-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,828 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 34 years. The home is situated on a 12,104 square foot residential lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $272,500. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $212,943 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 1426 Greenview Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,692 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool. This home was constructed in 1976 and is represented as inferior in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 42 years. The home is situated on a 11,116 square foot residential lot. This property sold in January 2025 for $285,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $244,228 in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 6094 Waycross Dr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,418 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool. This home was constructed in 1976 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 38 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $225,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, pool, market conditions, land area, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $195,942 in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on per square foot price. The petitioner has presented four sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $195,942 to $299,648 bracketing the property appraiser's just value. The indicated median price is $228,586. These sales took place from April 2024 to January 2025. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $228,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has presented no market support for any price adjustments, age adjustments are based on 0.05% per year implying an economic life of 2,000 years, and the property appraiser's just value falls within the price range of the sales presented by the petitioner.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. When the property appraiser has properly considered the factors set forth in §193.011, Florida Statutes, merely presenting an alternative analysis is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of correctness. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1) it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect, and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence. After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness. However, finds that the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner’s sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser appear to represent qualified, arm’s-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject and located within the same neighborhood. These sales are reasonably comparable in terms of location, age, size, and property type, and therefore provide an appropriate basis for analysis. When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser’s data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $238,000 and $297,500, bracketing the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is not overstated.

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph 194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;

2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or

3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate finds that the just value of $251,178 is in fact supported by evidence found on the record that complies with all eight factors of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, thus recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be DENIED.

Findings Of Fact

Petitioner Malcolm Louden with Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically on behalf of HP Florida I LLC on December 9, 2025 to provide testimonial and documentary evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office was represented at the hearing by Deputy Appraisers Doug Mack, CFE, Residential Supervisor and Brandon Jimenez, CFE. An opening statement regarding the hearing process and rules of procedure was read and all parties were placed under oath. This petition is one of four presented by the petitioner on this hearing date. The specific case numbers are 25-112, 25-113, 25-119 and 25-159. Any relevant testimony presented during these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to all hearings to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

The subject of this petition is listed on the Hernando County tax roll as Parcel ID R32-323-17-5180-1204-0010. This property is described as a single-family residence with no pool and a two-car garage. The subject property is located at 5406 Bayonne Avenue, Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The property consists of 2,839 square feet of adjusted building area on a 11,116-square-foot residential lot. The improvements were constructed in 2014 and are described as average quality in average condition. Based on an inspection of the property on April 26, 2022, the property appraiser has determined that the building improvements are of typical construction quality and in average condition. It appears that the subject of this petition has not sold within the 12-month period preceding the January 1 valuation date.

The property appraiser has confirmed the 2025 just value at $392,795, with an assessed value of $392,795 and a taxable value of $392,795. The record indicates that the just value has been revised since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM) was issued. The just, assessed, and taxable values reported on the TRIM Notice were $426,955, $418,000, and $418,000, respectively. The petitioner is requesting a revision to the 2025 just value, proposing a revision in just value to $365,000. This request is supported by a comparative analysis of alternative sales.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence, see Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1). Generally, relevant evidence is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. The evidence meets or exceeds a minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. Documentary evidence presented by the property appraiser during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

Documentary evidence presented by the petitioner during the hearing is described and labeled as follows:

- PET-1 (12 pages) - Petition, cover page, property summary, aerial photograph and street scene photograph, evaluation summary, sales grid, adjustment grid, comparable location map, google street scenes of comparables

The property appraiser raised no objection to the admission of the petitioner's evidence into the record at the hearing.

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in Section 193.011, Florida Statutes and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of evidence, or "more likely than not."

Florida courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is only required to consider the eight criteria, and that applying each factor is not mandatory. The courts have further found that if any one criterion does not reflect just value, it should be disregarded by the property appraiser. The special magistrate finds and summarizes the extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these criteria in the following paragraphs.

(1) Present cash value of the property - The amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arms-length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In short, the price without transaction costs. The buyer typically pays more, and the seller typically receives less than the price indicated by the documentary stamps due to these transaction costs. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. In mass appraising, the property appraiser considers this criterion by applying or considering the comparable market sales

using the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in a fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented sales evidence in support of the present cash value. Following are brief descriptions of the sales determined by the property appraiser to be most comparable to the subject and representative of value:

• PA Sale 1 - 11184 Mayflower Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,706 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2005 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in January 2024 for $409,000. This sale indicates a price of $149 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 2 - 12236 Verona St, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,684 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2002 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in September 2024 for $407,500. This sale indicates a price of $143 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PA Sale 3 - 11376 Blythville Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 2,574 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The home is situated on a 15,825 square foot residential site. This property sold in August 2024 for $384,900. This sale indicates a price of $145 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

In considering these sales, the property appraiser has compared them based on per square foot price. Three qualified sales judged to be most comparable to the subject have been presented in support of value. These sales range in price from $143 to $149 per square foot. The sales were selected based on similar location, age, size and utility. Relevant sale transactions occurred within the 12 months preceding the January 1, 2025 value date. This approach relies on feature value deductions and weighted "adjusted building area" calculations rather than paired-sales analysis or market-derived adjustments. Florida appraisal standards and case law (e.g., Valencia Center, Inc. v. Bystrom, 543 So. 2d 214 [Fla. 1989]) require that just value determinations be supported by market evidence showing how specific features or characteristics influence sale prices. Deducting fixed feature values from sale prices without verifying their market validity substitutes internal modeling for actual market behavior. While this may be useful for mass appraisal purposes, it does not provide the level of market support required in an individual value review before the VAB. A credible defense of just value in a hearing must demonstrate how specific comparable sales support the subject's assessed value through observable market adjustments. Reliance on internal modeling, without direct evidence of how the market reacts to property differences, fails to establish that the property appraiser's value represents the amount a willing buyer and seller would agree upon under normal conditions. Secondly, the "adjusted building area" metric has no direct market analogue. Buyers and appraisers typically compare residential properties based on heated living area (gross living area per ANSI or Fannie Mae standards). Introducing a proprietary or synthetic size measure distorts the relationship between price and size, undermining the comparability of sales. This means the model may show internal consistency but not external validity in the open market. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that this sales analysis does not comply with Criterion 1, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted appraisal principles.

(2) Highest & Best Use – This relates to the consideration of the fundamental appraisal concept of highest and best use or best use to which the property can be expected to be put in the immediate future. For improved properties, the highest and best use of the property as if vacant should be considered as well. The four steps establishing highest and best use are consideration of what is physically possible, legally permissible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use as vacant is identified through land use codes which, in part, are based on zoning. The highest and best use as improved is assumed to be the current use unless evidence shows otherwise. The property appraiser's office considers highest and best use by identifying and recording land size, zoning, building size, location and other characteristics. Once all coding is in place, comparable sales and rentals that have similar characteristics are used to value the property. The highest and best use of this property is for single-family residential use. This determination is undisputed by the petitioner and appears to have been appropriately considered by the property appraiser.

(3) Location of the property – The property appraiser assigns a neighborhood code to every property in the county. Sales of properties in the same or similar neighborhoods are typically used to determine locational adjustments. Often, site-specific location adjustments are made to reflect either an enhanced location (such as a water front site or in a golf course community) or an inferior location (such as adjacent to an industrial use or dumpsite). All of the comparable properties presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject. The location of the property appears to have been appropriately considered in the determination of just value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property – The property appraiser must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size, and extra features sizes and quantities. Land size is based on legal descriptions from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. From the evidence presented there do not appear to be any notable discrepancies in size or quantity.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. The property appraiser indicates that typical residential homebuyers do not rely on development costs when valuing residential property. Cost calculations found on the property record card appear to be supportive of the value indicated by comparable sales. It is the opinion of the magistrate that this cost analysis complies with Criterion 5, Chapter 193.011 of the Florida Statutes and generally accepted

appraisal principles.

(6) Condition of the property – The property appraiser considers the condition of properties through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal, or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the Computer Aided Mass Appraisal System value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. Photographs of the subject property have been presented as evidence of condition. As noted on the subject's property record card, the property appraiser conducted an exterior inspection of this property on April 26,2022. It appears that the property appraiser has appropriately considered this factor.

(7) The income from the property - Residential properties are typically valued for ad valorem tax purposes using the sales comparison approach, as provided for under Section 193.011, Florida Statutes. Comparable sales are relied upon due to the limited availability of market data on residential rental income, operating expenses, and capitalization rates for properties similar to the subject. In the residential market, buyers and sellers generally do not consider income-generating potential when evaluating a property for purchase. The special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has given adequate consideration to this statutory criterion in the analysis of the subject residential property.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - This criterion deals with the net proceeds from the sale of a property as received by the seller after deduction of all of the usual and reasonable fees and costs and expenses of financing and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. A few examples of the applicability of this criterion include: • unconventional or atypical financing arrangements, such as seller financing at favorable terms, which inflated the price, relative to what would have been achieved with a cash or case-equivalent arrangement, • the inclusion of tangible personal property, which may serve to increase the price above pure real property consideration, • atypically motivated buyers, who may pay a premium relative to that paid by the general market, • atypical closing costs arrangements, such as a seller paying the buyer's closing costs in exchange for a higher sales price. Because these situations may not be discoverable by the mass appraiser relying on raw gross price data, a deduction from the raw gross price is made with the goal being to arrive at 100% of the market value of the real property by eliminating any possible impact of non-real property consideration. This mass appraisal method is found to be acceptable by the Florida Department of Revenue and the Florida Courts. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether (1) the subject property was sold, (2) mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, (3) the appraisal approach used to value the property, (4) the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value, (5) appraised development or VAB review is involved. There is no legal authority for variation in the application of cost of sale deductions based on any of the preceding conditions. The professionally accepted appraisal practice is for Florida property appraisers to uniformly make cost of sale deductions of for all property within use code groups and then report these deductions on Form DR-493 to the Department of Revenue while, understandably, avoiding the impractical task of supporting these deductions in the absence of sufficiently reliable market data that demonstrates the typical, prevalent, and representative cost of sale deductions for each class of real property. In support of consideration of this criterion, the property appraiser has presented an analysis of the ratio between the aggregate sale price paid for all of the comparable properties compared with their aggregate just value assessments resulting in an average cost of sale adjustment of 14%. While this calculation may demonstrate a general relationship between assessed values and sale prices within the sample, it does not, by itself, establish market support for the subject property's assessed value.

It is implicit in mass appraisal that, even when properly specified and calibrated models are employed, some individual value conclusions may not meet standards of reasonableness, consistency, and accuracy. The purpose of this value review is to determine whether the just value reported on the current tax roll represents the just value of the property after consideration of the criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles, including those applicable to mass appraisal. Based on the relevant, competent, and substantial evidence presented at the hearing, it appears that the property appraiser has not appropriately considered all eight factors set forth in Florida Statute §193.011, thus is not entitled to the presumption of correctness.

By filing this petition, the petitioner alleges that the property appraiser has assessed the property in excess of just value. According to 12D-9.025(3)(a) of the Florida Administrative Code, the petitioner is responsible for presenting relevant and credible evidence in support of his or her belief that the property appraiser's determination is incorrect. Such evidence should be based on criteria similar to those established by the Legislature for the property appraiser to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment. The following paragraphs describe how the petitioner has addressed each of the eight criteria of Section 193.011, as determined by the special magistrate.

(1) Present cash value of the property - In support of a revision to just value, the petitioner has presented the following sales:

• PET Sale 1 - 5423 Bayonne Ave, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 3-bathroom 1,256 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 21 years. The home is situated on a 12,679 square foot residential site. This property sold in September 2024 for $335,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $365,563 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 2 - 5218 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,792 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1984 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 22 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in March 2024 for $286,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $309,891 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 3 - 10424 Gifford DRr, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,772 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2017 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 8 years. The home is situated on a 12,316 square foot residential site. This property sold in May 2024 for $380,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $365,607 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 4 - 5083 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 3-bathroom 2,466 square foot single-family residence. The property has no pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2019 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 6 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in October 2024 for $400,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $337,618 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 5 - 5052 Harbinger Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 4-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,762 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 2004 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 21 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in July 2024 for $385,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $386,571 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

• PET Sale 6 - 5294 Birchwood Rd, Spring Hill is described as a 3-bedroom 2-bathroom 1,878 square foot single-family residence. The property has a pool and a garage. This home was constructed in 1988 and is represented as similar in condition to the subject. The property appraiser has estimated the effective age to be 26 years. The home is situated on a 10,000 square foot residential site. This property sold in October 2024 for $390,000. Price adjustments were made to account for differences in building size, age, land size, pool, market conditions and cost of sale compared to the subject. This sale indicates a price of $390,698 per square foot in comparison with the subject.

The petitioner compares these sales based on total price. The petitioner has presented six sales that are claimed to be more similar to the subject than the sales relied upon by the property appraiser. The petitioner has included 15% downward price adjustments for costs of sale. Price adjustments were made to account for differences between the sales and the subject property. These sales range in adjusted price from $309,891 to $390,698. The indicated median price is $365,585. These sales took place from March 2024 to October 2024. This evidence has been presented by the petitioner in support of a $365,000 just value for the subject property. It is the opinion of the magistrate that the petitioner's sales evidence fails to meet the burden necessary to outweigh the evidence presented by the property appraiser by a preponderance of evidence because the petitioner has not inspected the subject or any of the sales, the photographs are from Google, adjustments for condition are based entirely on the age of the improvements, the sales are significantly smaller than the subject and age adjustments are based on 0.5% per year implying an economic life of 200 years.

(2) Highest and Best Use - The petitioner does not dispute that the highest and best use of the subject property is single-family residential.

(3) Location of the property - The petitioner appears familiar with the location characteristics of the subject property and has not claimed the presence of any atypical or adverse location factors that would materially affect its use or value.

(4) Quantity or size of the property - The petitioner does not dispute the size or quantity of the land or improvements reported by the property appraiser during the hearing, nor was any allegation made that these factors were miscalculated or improperly considered in the valuation.

(5) The cost of the property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon - The petitioner has presented no analysis of land value or depreciated building costs.

(6) Condition - The petitioner has not presented any credible evidence or asserted that the condition of the property differs from the description provided by the property appraiser during the hearing. Furthermore, no claim was made regarding any significant physical deficiencies that would affect the property's use or value.

(7) The income from the property - The petitioner has presented no analysis of income and expense at this hearing, however, as mentioned, this method is rarely used to value residential properties for ad valorem tax purposes.

(8) Cost of Sale Adjustment - The petitioner has made deductions for cost of sale based on the DR-493 form submitted by the property appraiser to the Florida Department of Revenue in consideration of this criterion.

The petitioner has not specifically challenged the market evidence or the analysis conducted by the property appraiser in support of the just value of the subject property. Pursuant to Florida Statute §194.301(1), it is the petitioner’s responsibility to demonstrate that the property appraiser’s evidence and/or analysis are incorrect and that the determined value does not represent the just value of the property by a preponderance of the evidence.

After careful consideration of all evidence presented at the hearing, the special magistrate finds that the property appraiser has not established the presumption of correctness due to deficiencies in the analysis of the comparable sales. However, the record contains competent and substantial evidence of just value that complies with all eight criteria set forth in Florida Statute §193.011 and generally accepted appraisal principles. While it is the opinion of the special magistrate that the petitioner's sales analysis is flawed, the comparable sales data presented by the property appraiser represent qualified, arm's-length transactions involving residential properties similar to the subject in terms of size, age, location, and property type and located within the same neighborhood. As such, the sales themselves provide a reasonable and credible basis for market analysis despite shortcomings in their presentation.

When considered on the basis of overall sale price, with appropriate adjustments applied to each for cost of sale, the property appraiser's data provide credible support for the determination of just value. Based on the documented sales in evidence, the indicated range including a 15% adjustment for cost of sale is between $243,100 and $343,444, all three lower than the just value of the property and indicating that the just value is overstated. Based on these calculations it is the recommendation of the special magistrate that the 2025 just value should be revised to $343,400 (rd.) calculated as follows:

Conclusions of Law

According to §194.301, Florida Statutes, in any administrative action in which a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment of value, the property appraiser's assessment is presumed correct if the appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was arrived at by complying with §193.011, any other applicable statutory requirements relating to classified use values or assessment caps, and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. However, a taxpayer who challenges an assessment is entitled to a determination by the value adjustment board or court of the appropriateness of the appraisal methodology used in making the assessment. The value of property must be determined by an appraisal methodology that complies with the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

The burden of proof is on the party initiating the challenge as specified in paragraph §194.301(2). If the challenge is to the assessed value of the property, the party initiating the challenge has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessed value:

1. Does not represent the just value of the property after taking into account any applicable limits on annual increases in the value of the property;
2. Does not represent the classified use value or fractional value of the property if the property is required to be assessed based on its character or use; or
3. Is arbitrarily based on appraisal practices that are different from the appraisal practices generally applied by the property appraiser to comparable property within the same county.

If the party challenging the assessment satisfies these requirements, the presumption of correctness is overcome, and the value adjustment board shall establish the assessment if there is competent, substantial evidence of value in the record which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices. Otherwise, the assessment stands.

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the special magistrate has followed in the preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

1. Determine whether the property appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the property appraiser's just value methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the property appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support just value for the subject property complies with Florida Statute §193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. Based upon the evidence presented on the record during this hearing, the special magistrate finds that the presumption of correctness has not been established by the property appraiser.

2. If the property appraiser does not establish a presumption of correctness, or if the presumption of correctness is overcome, the special magistrate shall determine whether the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of just value which cumulatively meets the criteria of §193.011, Florida Statutes, and professionally accepted appraisal practices. It is the opinion of the special magistrate that the record contains such competent and substantial evidence of just value.

3. If the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence for establishing a revised just value, the appraiser special magistrate shall establish a revised just value based only upon such evidence. In establishing a revised just value, the special magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by one of the parties. In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the special magistrate recommends the petitioner's request for revision in the 2025 just value be PARTIALLY GRANTED to a revised just value of $343,400.

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: SFR JV-2 DDTL BORROWER LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 00430242

Petitioner Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of SFR JV-2 DDTL BORROWER LLC on December 12, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack and Brandon Jimenez.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 12 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 just value at $247,198. The assessed value is $247,198 and the taxable value is $247,198. At the time the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM Notice) was issued, the just value was $258,338 which was subsequently reduced to $247,198.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $240,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-323-17-5220-1502-0060. The subject property is located at 5337 Freeport Dr in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 2005. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 1,979 square feet of adjusted building area on a 10,203 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 09/23/25 to change the class quality from D3 to D2, revise measurements for PT2 and revise sketch for bay window.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 12 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The Petitioner did not provide documentary evidence within the statutory timeframe. The Special Magistrate considered the Petitioner's sworn verbal testimony presented at the hearing.

The petitioner acknowledged that they received the PAO's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. The documentary evidence submitted by the PAO and the sworn testimony presented at the hearing meet the requirements of Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and are considered sufficient, relevant, and credible for purposes of the hearing record and consideration of the assessment at issue.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents Just Value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has presented into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PAO Sale #1 was built in 2005 and has 2,174 adjusted square feet on a 11,567 square foot lot. This property sold in August 2024 for $329,900 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $324,398.
PAO Sale #2 was built in 1996 and has 2,007 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $360,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $357,134.
PAO Sale #3 was built in 1997 and has 1,853 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in March 2024 for $299,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $296,865.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While adjusted square footage is generally considered less precise than heated square footage in fee appraisal, it is commonly utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $296,865 to $357,134 with a median of $324,398 and a mean of $326,132. After adjusting downward 17% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $270,690 or approximately $134.84 per square foot (based on the mean ASQFT of the PAO's sales).

The PAO sales reflect a value for the subject of $134.84/SF x 1,979 (ASQFT) or $266,848. The subject's Just Value assessment reflects a value of $124.91/SF or $247,198, which is supported by the PAO's comparable sales analysis and reconciliation.

The PAO sales were considered credible and relevant.

The Petitioner did not submit documentary evidence within the statutory timeframe and therefore presented only sworn verbal testimony at the hearing. By filing DR-486, Petition to the Value Adjustment Board Request for Hearing, the Petitioner is alleging that the PAO has assessed the property in excess of just value. It is the Petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Proof should be based on similar criteria to which the Legislature has provided for the PAO to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment.

The Petitioner stated that, in determining their estimate of value, they considered the subject's living area of 1,739 SF for comparison purposes. Their analysis included 3 sales ranging in living area from 1,716 to 1,990 SF with sales prices ranging from $290,000 to $351,000. Their adjusted sales prices range from $234,131 to $245,408 with a mean of $239,000 and a median of $240,000, which is also their opinion of value.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extras features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The PAO considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 17%.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.

8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 17%. The Petitioner did not specify if their reconciliation process included a COS adjustment.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria and further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

Property Appraiser (Mean Adjusted Price Per SF x Subject ASQFT)	$266,848
Petitioner (Stated Estimate of Value)	$240,000
Assessment (Just Value)	$247,198

The Just Value is supported by the PAO sales, therefore the petition is denied.

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties and determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence meet the test of relevancy and credibility and WAS sufficient to reach the preponderance of evidence standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(5)(6). The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence supporting the just value assessment. After weighing all of the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Denied.

Petition No. 25-162

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE
VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD
HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: SFR JV-1 2019-1 Borrower LLC
PARCEL KEY NO: 00499311

Petitioner Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc. appeared telephonically at a hearing on behalf of SFR JV-1 2019-1 Borrower LLC on December 12, 2025 to provide evidence pertaining to the 2025 property assessment for real property located in Hernando County, Florida. The Hernando County Property Appraiser's Office (PAO) was represented at the hearing by Doug Mack and Brandon Jimenez.

The Special Magistrate confirmed that all parties agree to hold the hearing telephonically. An opening statement regarding the role of the special magistrate was read and the parties were placed under oath. This petition was one of 12 scheduled by the petitioner on this hearing date. Any relevant testimony from these individual hearings will be incorporated by reference to avoid redundancy and expedite the hearing process. Only testimony relevant to this parcel was considered in reaching the findings and conclusions herein.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Property Appraiser confirmed the 2025 Just Value at $321,975. The assessed value is $275,017 and the taxable value is $275,017. There have been no changes to the values since the Notice of Proposed Property Taxes (TRIM Notice) was issued.

The Petitioner estimated Just Value at $295,000.

The subject of this petition is identified on the Hernando County tax rolls as parcel number R32-323-17-5090-0570-0110. The subject property is located at 11161 Portsmouth St in Spring Hill, Hernando County, Florida. The subject is described as a single-family residence which was originally constructed in 1984. The evidence indicates that the property consists of 2,231 square feet of adjusted building area on a 14,241 square foot residential lot. The PAO conducted a field review of the subject parcel on 09/23/2024 to complete a value adjustment review.

The packet provided by the Property Appraiser was admitted into evidence as PAO-A and consisted of 18 pages including a cover page, case synopsis, subject property record card, comparable sales tester and analysis, location maps, cost of sale adjustment clarification and computations, property record cards for provided sales and a structure area adjustment factors sheet.

The Petitioner did not provide documentary evidence within the statutory timeframe. The Special Magistrate considered the Petitioner's sworn verbal testimony presented at the hearing.

The petitioner acknowledged that they received the PAO's evidence in compliance with the statutory procedures for evidence exchange. The documentary evidence submitted by the PAO and the sworn testimony presented at the hearing meet the requirements of Florida Administrative Code 12D-9.025(1) and 12D-9.025(2)(b) and are considered sufficient, relevant, and credible, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The Property Appraiser asserts in the Case Synopsis that "The Property Appraiser's Office used the Sales Comparison Approach and has considered all of the Eight Criteria required in Florida Statute 193.011 and we believe we have demonstrated that we have the preponderance of evidence that the subject's value represents just value".

The Florida Legislature has enacted eight criteria that the property appraiser must consider when determining just value. In any administrative or judicial action where a taxpayer challenges an ad valorem tax assessment, the property appraiser's estimate of just value is presumed correct if it is proven that the assessment was made in compliance with the eight criteria outlined in F.S. Section 193.011 and in accordance with professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate. The only standard of proof in this administrative review is a preponderance of the evidence, meaning the greater weight of the evidence or "more likely true than not" as per F.S 194.301.

Florida Courts have consistently held that the property appraiser is required to consider all eight factors, that each factor does not have be given equal weight but that failure to consider any single factor can invalidate an assessment. The extent to which the property appraiser has considered each of these eight criteria for this property is summarized in the following paragraphs.

1. Present Cash Value of the Property- the amount a willing buyer would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length. This relates to the sales comparison approach and requires the property appraiser to consider the sale price exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of sale. In an assessment review hearing, the property appraiser supports just value through comparable sales analysis similar to that found in fee appraisal. The property appraiser has submitted into evidence comparable sales in support of the present cash value. The PAO relied primarily upon the sales comparison approach, considered Computer-Assisted Mass Appraisal (CAMA) analysis, and placed no weight on the cost or income approaches to value. This is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO supplied 3 improved sales in the subject's market area:
PAO Sale #1 was built in 2004 and has 2,266 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in May 2024 for $335,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $332,173.
PAO Sale #2 was built in 2006 and has 2,197 adjusted square feet on a 10,000 square foot lot. This property sold in November 2024 for $330,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $327,418.
PAO Sale #3 was built in 1989 and has 2,285 adjusted square feet on a 10,754 square foot lot. This property sold in October 2024 for $370,000 and the adjusted sales price for comparison purposes is $363,619.

The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted square foot (SF). While adjusted square footage is generally considered less precise than heated square footage in fee appraisal, it is commonly utilized in mass appraisal. Adjusted sales prices range from $327,418 to $363,619 with a median of $332,173 and a mean of $341,070. After adjusting downward 21% for COS, these 3 sales indicate a mean of $269,445 or approximately $119.75 per square foot.

The PAO sales reflect a value for the subject of $119.75/SF x 2,231 (ASQFT) or $267,162. The subject's Just Value assessment reflects a value of $144.32/SF or $321,975, which is not supported when considered in relation to the PAO's COS-adjusted comparable sales and reconciliation.

The PAO sales were considered credible and relevant.

The Petitioner did not submit documentary evidence within the statutory timeframe and therefore presented only sworn verbal testimony at the hearing. By filing DR-486, Petition to the Value Adjustment Board Request for Hearing, the Petitioner is alleging that the PAO has assessed the property in excess of just value. It is the Petitioner's burden to prove the assessment does not represent just value. Proof should be based on similar criteria to which the Legislature has provided for the PAO to follow. To prevail in an assessment challenge, the taxpayer must prove more than a mere difference of opinion regarding an assessment.

The Petitioner stated that, in determining their estimate of value, they considered the subject's living area of 1,914 SF for comparison purposes. Their analysis included 5 sales ranging in living area from 1,636 to 2,100 SF with sales prices ranging from $250,000 to $369,900. Their adjusted sales prices range from $211,793 to $318,078 with a mean of $281,000 and a median of $295,000, which is also their opinion of value.

2. Highest & Best Use- the use that is legally permissible, physically possible, financially feasible, and maximally productive. The highest and best use of the subject is for residential use. The highest and best use was not disputed by the Petitioner.
3. Location of the Property- how the property's surroundings influence its value. Site specific location adjustments can be made to reflect either an enhanced location or an inferior location. All of the comparables presented in support of value are located in the same overall market area as the subject (same subdivision). Each has similar frontage and/or views. The location of this property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
4. Quantity or Size of the Property-square footage, acreage, front footage, unit count. The PAO must consider the quantity or size of the property by determining and recording the correct land size, building size and extra features and quantities. Land size is based on legal description from recorded plats or metes and bounds. Building sizes and extra features are determined by inspection and measured by deputy property appraisers. The size of the property was not disputed by the Petitioner.
5. Cost of the Property and present replacement value of any improvements thereon – An analysis of cost/depreciated cost is made in the CAMA system and found on the property record card. PAO considers replacement costs through the use of Marshall & Swift Valuation Service data and through annual surveys with different contractors to come up with feature rates (these are adjusted manually). Rates are adjusted annually to reflect the costs relevant to January 1 of the given tax year. No separate analysis of cost has been presented during the hearing. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this cost analysis complies with 193.011(5) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.
6. Condition of the Property-physical state and functional adequacy of improvements. The PAO considers the condition of the property through periodic property inspections, no less than once every five years as required by Statute. Other events can trigger more frequent site inspections, including the sale of a property, issuance of a building permit, assessment appeal or at the taxpayer's request. Condition is considered as a factor applied to the CAMA system value calculation for value losses from all sources based upon an age/life depreciation method. It appears that the condition of the property has been considered by the PAO and depreciation was calculated at 15%.
7. Income from the Property- income producing ability of the property. No analysis of income has been presented during the hearing and buyers in this sector of the real estate market typically do not consider income generating ability when valuing this type of property. It is the opinion of the Special Magistrate that this income analysis complies with 193.011(7) F.S. and generally accepted appraisal practices.

8. Net Proceeds of the Sale- the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms of financing arrangements. Applicable law provides for uniform cost of sale deductions in just valuations without regard to whether the property was sold, whether mass appraisal or single property appraisal is used, the appraisal approach used to value the property or whether the petitioner is seeking an increase or decrease in just value.

   The PAO considered cost of sales in their reconciliation process of 21%. The Petitioner did not specify if their reconciliation process included a COS adjustment.

Ultimate Findings of Fact

Pursuant to Section 194.301 F.S, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011 F.S., the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable properties in the same county.

1. In accordance with Section 194.301 F.S., it is concluded that the PAO DID NOT establish a presumption of correctness. While the PAO applied a COS adjustment to its comparable sales, the final just value assessment materially exceeds the value indications derived from the PAO's own COS-adjusted sales analysis and was not adequately reconciled to those indications, resulting in noncompliance with Criterion 8 of Section 193.011, F.S. The Petitioner did not submit documentary evidence and did not independently establish a specific just value by a preponderance of the evidence.
2. The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of the evidence that the assessment was based on arbitrary appraisal practice different from like properties in the same county.
3. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence, including the PAO's own comparable sales analysis with appropriate COS adjustments applied, demonstrating that the assessed just value exceeds fair market value.

Property Appraiser	(Mean Adjusted Price Per SF x Subject ASQFT)	$267,162
Petitioner	(Stated Estimate of Value)	$295,000
Assessment (Just Value)		$321,975

Conclusions of Law

Florida Administrative Code section 12D-9.027 lays out a sequence of general procedural steps that the Special Magistrate has followed in preparation of this recommendation to the Value Adjustment Board:

Determine whether the Property Appraiser has established a presumption of correctness for the assessment and determine whether the Property Appraiser's just valuation methodology is appropriate. The presumption of correctness is not established unless the Property Appraiser proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the methodology used to support the just value for the subject property complies with 193.011 F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices, including mass appraisal standards, if appropriate.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all documentary evidence submitted by the PAO and the sworn testimony presented at the hearing and determined that such evidence was relevant and credible to the valuation at issue.

The Special Magistrate further determined that the hearing record contains competent, substantial evidence of value in compliance with Section 193.011, F.S. and professionally accepted appraisal practices.

Because the PAO did not establish a presumption of correctness, and because the evidence of record demonstrates that the assessed just value exceeds fair market value, the Special Magistrate is authorized to determine a revised just value based upon the competent, substantial evidence in the record. In establishing a revised just value, the Special Magistrate is not restricted to any specific value offered by either party.

After weighing the PAO's COS-adjusted comparable sales analysis and the Petitioner's testimony, and considering the subject's age, size and market position, the Special Magistrate finds that a reconciled just value of $280,000 is supported by the competent, substantial evidence of record.

Recommendation

In view of the findings of fact and conclusions of law as they relate to this petition before the Value Adjustment Board, the Special Magistrate recommends that the petition be Granted in Part and revised to $280,000.

PETITION NO. 25-163

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2020-1 Borrower LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00499561

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Patrick Rodriguez of Ownwell, Inc for Melissa Quigg (SFR JV-1 2020-1 Borrower LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $304,805, an assessed or capped value of $278,805, and a taxable value of $278,805. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $282,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,236 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,447 adjusted SF that was built in 2005. The subject is located at 2449 Allegro Ave, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO noted that the subject parcel was reviewed on 2/29/25 (as opposed to 2024 as reported) to assess stabilization permit dated 9/26/2023.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.69-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that comparable sale #2 is a wood frame home, comparable sale #3 has an effective age of 2011 and is a repaired sinkhole property – similar to the subject, and comparable sale #5 has an improvement size of 1,792 rather than the 2,185 SF reported.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $293,647. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $287,583. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $290,615, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $304,805. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

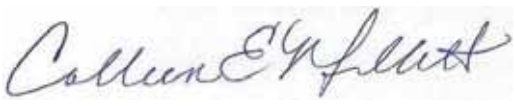
CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in the just value to $290,615.

PETITION NO. 25-165

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Austin Sandler (RS Rental III-B LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00280092

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Patrick Rodriguez of Ownwell, Inc for Austin Sandler (RS Rental III-B LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $198.041, an assessed or capped value of $198,041, and a taxable value of $198,041. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $180,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,262 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,607 adjusted SF that was built in 1980. The subject is located at 10485 Lightwood St, Spring Hill, FL.

The PAO evidence consists of an evidence packet with a case synopsis, PRC with photo and an aerial map of the subject property, a sales analysis report with (4) sales, location map of sales, summary of cost of sale adjustment, PRCs for each sale, and verbal testimony.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (6) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (4) improved sales from the subject market area (including the subject transfer). The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. All sales were noted to be in the same neighborhood code as the subject property with particular attention to age.

The Petitioner provided (6) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (6) comparable sales were within a 1.13-mile radius and within the same subdivision code as the subject.

The PAO, in rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence, noted that comparable sale #1 is the subject property and also used by PAO. Comparable sale #5 improvement size is incorrect as this property is a 2-story and only first floor area was indicated on sales grid. Additionally, PAO noted that this property had condition issues and sold twice; at $160,000, $230,000 and was listed again. Comparable sale #6 is a repaired sinkhole and lastly, comparables 2, 4 and 6 all had much newer effective ages than the subject.

Petitioner stated that the value is best represented by the sale of the subject property and as such, amended their estimate of just value to $172,177.

Of the sales provided, (4) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies or sale date). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $169,483. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $207,188. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $188,336, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $198,041. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and

After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Austin Sandler (AO PROPCO 1 LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00215546

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Austin Sandler (AO PROPCO 1 LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $190,696, an assessed or capped value of $190,696, and a taxable value of $190,696. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $147,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,424 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,696 adjusted SF that was built in 1991. The subject is located at 1414 Apricot Ln, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (3) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on both the age of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 1.02 miles.

The Petitioner provided (3) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (3) comparable sales were within a 0.66-mile radius of the subject.

The PAO had a rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence and noted that all sales utilized were older homes (1974-1978) and all had older effective ages (1985-1987). The PAO also noted that Petitioner's Sale 1 sold in February of 2025 and would not have been considered by PAO.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $165,426. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $230,067. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $197,747, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $190,696. This data reliably supports that the subject is not over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special

Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be DENIED.

PETITION NO. 25-167

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00209349

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $206,865, an assessed or capped value of $206,865, and a taxable value of $206,865. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $161,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,620 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,723 adjusted SF that was built in 1977. The subject is located at 6009 Applegate Dr, Spring Hill, FL.

The PAO evidence consists of an evidence packet with a case synopsis, PRC with photo and an aerial map of the subject property, a sales analysis report with (3) sales, location map of sales, summary of cost of sale adjustment, PRCs for each sale, and verbal testimony.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 1.54 miles.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.60-mile radius of the subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence.

Of the sales provided, (2) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $171,640. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $239,133. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $205,387, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $206,865. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in just value to $205,387.

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00225919

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $131,204, an assessed or capped value of $131,204, and a taxable value of $131,204. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $120,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,324 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,396 adjusted SF that was built in 1971. The subject is located at 442 Briarwood Ln, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (3) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 1.22 miles.

The Petitioner provided (3) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (3) comparable sales were within a 0.76-mile radius of the subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence.

Of the sales provided, (1) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $123,304. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $200,317. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $161,811, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $131,204. This data reliably supports that the subject is not over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be DENIED.

PETITION NO. 25-169

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC)

PARCEL KEY NO: 00230271

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Austin Sandler (RS RENTAL III-A LLC), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $129,682, an assessed or capped value of $129,682, and a taxable value of $129,682. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $89,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,271 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,356 adjusted SF that was built in 1973. The subject is located at 898 Cobblestone Dr, Spring Hill, FL.

The PAO evidence consists of an evidence packet with a case synopsis, PRC with photo and an aerial map of the subject property, a sales analysis report with (3) sales, location map of sales, summary of cost of sale adjustment, PRCs for each sale, and verbal testimony.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (5) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 0.97 miles.

The Petitioner provided (5) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (5) comparable sales were within a 0.95-mile radius of the subject. The Petitioner reported the subject heated SF at 1,001 SF on the sales grid and per the PRC, the subject has 1,271 SF of heated living area. Special Magistrate has considered adjustments to the sales grid for this line item.

The PAO had a rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence and stated that Sale #1 had a $44,800 sale price which was considerably low and as such, PAO questioned the condition at time of sale. Sale #3 was a 2025 sale and again condition was questioned as sales price was $115,000. Petitioner had no information on condition to report.

Of the sales provided, (3) Petitioner and (1) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $119,961. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $176,800. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $148,381, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $129,682. This data reliably supports that the subject is not over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from

1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. (5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $139,365, an assessed or capped value of $139,365, and a taxable value of $139,365. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $99,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 1,232 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 1,438 adjusted SF that was built in 1979. The subject is located at 9272 Carthage Rd, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (4) sales, location map of sales, photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 0.66 miles.

The Petitioner provided (4) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (4) comparable sales were within a 0.78-mile radius of the subject.

The PAO had a rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence and stated that condition was an issue on Sale #1 which had a low sales price at $95,800 and resold in 2025 for $219,000 and also on Sale #3 which had a low sales price at $90,000 and was remodeled and valued at $181,904. The Petitioner had no information pertaining to condition of the sales and stated that they were possibly overimproved after rehab.

Of the sales provided, (2) Petitioner and (1) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $116,490. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $190,188. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $153,339, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $139,365. This data reliably supports that the subject is not over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID NOT overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES NOT exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

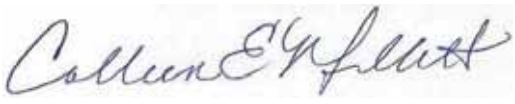
CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, "relevant evidence" is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.



The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of "relevancy and credibility" and WAS sufficient to reach the "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS NOT satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be DENIED.

PETITION NO. 25-171

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Chris Cash (Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01818616

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Chris Cash (Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $342,136, an assessed or capped value of $342,136, and a taxable value of $342,136. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $295,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,578 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,816 adjusted SF that was built in 2024. The subject is located at 354 Rain Lily Ave, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (3) sales, location map of sales, no photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 0.16 miles.

The Petitioner provided (3) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (3) comparable sales were within the subject development of Verano. Additionally, the subject is a 2-story dwelling and only first floor living area was utilized for subject and comparable sales however, all were reportedly the same size as subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence.

Of the sales provided, (0) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $295,283. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $314,103. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $304,693, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $342,136. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special

Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

“Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in just value to $304,693.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,390 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,619 adjusted SF that was built in 2024. The subject is located at 11917 Lavender Lp, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (3) sales, location map of sales, no photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 0.15 miles.

The Petitioner provided (3) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (1) was used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (3) comparable sales were within the subject development of Verano. Additionally, the subject is a 2-story dwelling and only first floor living area was utilized for subject and comparable sales however, all were reportedly the same size as subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence other than to note that Sale 2 was also used by PAO.

Of the sales provided, (0) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $304,769. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $304,668. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $304,719, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $321,748. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

The 1st and 8th criteria were introduced by the legislature after this ruling, suggesting that the legislature wishes real estate to be taxed net of typical sales costs, implying that "just value" is in fact equal to "market value net of typical sales costs". Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria

required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) The present cash value of the property, which is the amount a willing purchaser would pay a willing seller, exclusive of reasonable fees and costs of purchase, in cash or the immediate equivalent thereof in a transaction at arm's length;

The PAO, within the CAMA system, makes an adjustment for cost of sale within their direct application of the sales comparison analysis. An adjustment is made for cost of sale as noted under Criteria 8 in their CAMA analysis and in the reconciliation process.

(2) The highest and best use...,(shortened) Land use and building codes were considered along with the character of any existing site improvements, the subject is noted to be residential use and was not disputed by either party. Comparable data was selected based on this information.

(3) The location of the property; The subject property is assigned a location or neighborhood code within the PAO database related to its specific location. Comparable data is selected with as similar a location as is possible, while also considering other relevant factors.

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. When the net proceeds of the sale of any property are utilized, directly or indirectly, in the determination of just valuation of realty of the sold parcel or any other parcel under the provisions of this section, the property appraiser, for the purposes of such determination, shall exclude any portion of such net proceeds attributable to payments for household furnishings or other items of personal property."

The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.

The Petitioner HAS shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment is excessive. Thus, the assessed value DOES exceed 100% of the fair market value of the property.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Department of Revenue (DOR) has developed specific evidence rules for presenting relevant and credible evidence. See Rule 12D-9.025(1), Florida Administrative Code (FAC). Generally, “relevant evidence” is evidence that is reasonably related, directly or indirectly, to the statutory criteria that apply to the issue under review. This description means the evidence meets or exceeds the minimum level of relevance necessary to be admitted for consideration, although it does not necessarily mean that the evidence has sufficient relevance to legally justify a particular conclusion. See Rule 12D-9.025(2)(b) FAC.

The Special Magistrate reviewed all evidence presented by all parties. In accordance with DOR guidelines, the Special Magistrate determined that the evidence and testimony was relevant and credible to the valuation at hand. Thus, the evidence as presented was admitted for consideration in relation to the appropriateness of the subject assessment.

The Special Magistrate has determined that the testimonial and documentary evidence (combined) meet the test of “relevancy and credibility” and WAS sufficient to reach the “preponderance of the evidence” standard of proof required by Rule 12D-9.027(6) FAC.

The Special Magistrate also determined that there IS competent and substantial evidence of value on record in compliance with the criteria of FS 193.011 and professionally accepted appraisal practice to establish the assessment.

The Special Magistrate finds that the Petitioner HAS satisfied the "preponderance of the evidence" standard under the facts as testified to, that the appraiser's assessment is in excess of just value. After weighing all the documentary and testimonial evidence it is concluded that the assessment IS NOT reasonable and within market parameters.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended by the Special Magistrate that the relief applied for in this petition be GRANTED in part with a reduction in just value to $304,719.

PETITION NO. 25-173

RECOMMENDATION OF SPECIAL MAGISTRATE

VALUE ADJUSTMENT BOARD

HERNANDO COUNTY, FLORIDA

IN RE: THE PETITION OF: Chris Cash (Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP)

PARCEL KEY NO: 01818288

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The Petitioner, Edwin Rivera of Ownwell, Inc for Chris Cash (Invitation Homes 7 Florida LP), appeared telephonically before the Special Magistrate to give testimony. The Property Appraiser was represented by BRANDON JIMENEZ and DOUG MACK. All present parties were put under sworn oath.

The Property Appraiser verified the values accordingly; a just value of $322,461, an assessed or capped value of $322,461, and a taxable value of $322,461. There was no change in value after the process.

The Petitioner estimated just value at $302,000.

Subject Property Type: The subject is a 2,390 SF (heated) single family dwelling with 2,625 adjusted SF that was built in 2024. The subject is located at 11934 Lavender Lp, Spring Hill, FL.

The Petitioner's evidence consists of a petition, summary of evidence submission, property photos, evaluation summary, market value analysis grid with (3) sales, location map of sales, no photos of comparable sales, and verbal testimony.

Per testimony by the PAO, there was a timely evidence exchange. There were no objections, and all the evidence noted above is considered admissible (unless specifically noted as inadmissible).

Overall, the evidence presented meets specific evidence rules (See Rule 12D-9,025(1) and Rule 12D-9.025(2)b, F.A.C) and is considered sufficient, relevant, and credible information available, from which a reliable estimate of just, assessed, and taxable value can be estimated.

BASIC AND UNDERLYING FINDINGS OF FACT

The PAO relied upon the sales comparison approach to value and considered CAMA analysis at TRIM. The approach utilized is considered an appropriate methodology by the Special Magistrate.

The PAO presented their evidence packet with a sales analysis report utilizing (3) improved sales from the subject market area. The PAO performed their analysis utilizing adjusted SF which is generally considered less reliable than utilizing heated SF however, is often used in mass appraisal. The PAO focused on age and location of the subject, and as such, all comparable sales are within 0.08 miles.

The Petitioner provided (3) improved sales (including the subject transfer if applicable). Of these sales, (0) were used by the PAO. The Petitioner adjusted for differences in age, heated SF, land size, features, time, and COS. The Petitioner focused on location and as such, all (3) comparable sales were within the subject development of Verano. Additionally, the subject is a 2-story dwelling and only first floor living area was utilized for subject and comparable sales however, all were reportedly the same size as subject.

The PAO had no rebuttal to the Petitioner's evidence.

Of the sales provided, (0) Petitioner and (0) PAO sales are not considered reliable (dissimilar in age, dissimilar design and/or size, lack of or excessive adjustment due to size discrepancies, sale date out of range). The median of the most reliable Petitioner sales indicates a just value for the subject of $304,769. The median of the most reliable PAO sales indicates a just value for the subject of $318,042. The median of all the most reliable sales from both parties is $311,406, which is a credible and reliable just value for the subject based on the available data. The PAO just value conclusion is $322,461. This data reliably supports that the subject is over assessed.

The PAO reported that their internal analysis supports a 15% increase in sale prices from 1/1/2024 to the lien date of 1/1/2025. They also reported that the DOR performed a study across this same period, utilizing qualified sales of like property, and concluded a 15% increase over the same period. The Special Magistrate assumes that the PAO utilized a process of sampling paired sales or some other subset of the available data. The Special

Magistrate will equally weigh the DOR study results (15%) utilizing all qualified property sales, and the PAO conclusion (15%) and utilize 15% herein.

The Special Magistrate has applied a qualitative analysis of the data submitted by all parties and has also considered the recent sale of the subject property, if applicable. A COS factor of 15%, market conditions adjustment based on 12% annually, age/condition adjustment, land size/value, a factor for adjusted SF or non-heated area as a % of overall space, extra features differences, a SF adjustment, quality and view adjustments were considered.

The PAO considered the cost of sales in their reconciliation process. Proper consideration of the 1st and 8th criteria for the subject property would be approximately 7-12% (cost of sales adjustment; estimated to be brokerage cost of 5-7%, personal property 1-2%, and financing costs of 1-3%, properly considered for the subject). The Special Magistrate will consider this when weighing the appropriateness of each parties' conclusions and the assessment level.

The DOR utilizes 15% cost of sales in their oversight function for all property in aggregate. The Magistrate has considered the specific subject property in relation to cost of sales factors as follows (certain scale and property types will vary significantly if cost of sales is to be performed according to statute).

Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., requires proper consideration of the "net proceeds of sale," regardless of whether an actual sale of the property has occurred. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001). However, the statute does not require the property appraiser to select the value generated by the application of Subsection 193.011(8), F.S., and apply it in a blanket fashion to all assessments. See Turner v. Tokai Financial Services, Inc., 767 So.2d 494 (Fla. 2nd DCA 2000) review denied 780 So.2d 916 (Fla. 2001).

All property is to be assessed at 100% of just value Walter v. Schuler 176 So.2d 81 (Fla 1965). The terms "just value" "fair market value' and "full cash value" are legally synonymous. Id.

Based on current training material for Special Magistrates, this consistently and strongly advises a deduction for the 1st and 8th criteria.

The PAO testified to documentation that pertains to the DOR treatment of the eight criteria required under FS 193.011. The PAO testified to and has documented how each of the criteria was considered in their development of the assessment in regard to the property at hand. The PAO addressed the requirements of FS 193.011 as follows:

"Factors to consider in deriving just valuation. – In arriving at just valuation as required under s. 4, Art. VII of the State Constitution, the property appraiser shall take into consideration the following factors:

(4) The quantity or size of the property; The size of the building, the site size and site improvements are based on data contained within the PRC and all comparable sales are selected with attention to similarity of size, while also considering and weighing the other relevant factors.

(5) The cost of said property and the present replacement value of any improvements thereon; Within the CAMA system, the PAO uses cost data and when applicable, considers a pure replacement cost new and depreciation factors within a cost approach to value.

(6) The condition of said property; The condition of the property, through periodic site inspections, actual age, and information submitted to them by property owners is considered by the PAO. The information is given a % good or % depreciation factor and is noted in their subject documentation and/or PRC card and utilized in the CAMA analysis.

(7) The income from said property; and; When applicable, the PAO prepares an income capitalization analysis based on market data contained in their files, general market statistics, and when available, actual subject performance is considered.

(8) "The net proceeds of the sale of the property, as received by the seller, after deduction of all the usual and reasonable fees and costs of the sale, including the costs and expenses of financing, and allowance for unconventional or atypical terms or financing arrangements. The cost of sales is considered by the PAO within their CAMA analysis and in reconciliation when performing discrete sales, income or cost analysis. Sales prices of comparable properties are adjusted downward (reportedly) within CAMA, typically at near 15%.

ULTIMATE FINDINGS OF FACT

Florida Statute section 194.301 elaborates the standards of review that the Special Magistrate must apply to any petition to the Value Adjustment Board. The statute states as follows:

Pursuant to Section 194.301, the Property Appraiser's assessment shall be entitled to a Presumption of Correctness if the Property Appraiser shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the Property Appraiser considered each of the eight criteria set forth in Section 193.011, the Property Appraiser applied the correct appraisal methodology based upon the characteristics of the property, and the Property Appraiser did not use appraisal practices which are different than the appraisal practices generally applied by the Property Appraiser to comparable property in the same county.

In accordance with Rule 12D-10.003(5)(a), it is concluded that the PAO DID establish a presumption of correctness by properly considering the eight criteria described in FS 193.011. Further, it is concluded that the methodology used by the PAO IS appropriate and DOES comply with professionally accepted appraisal practices for the subject property type. The Petitioner DID overcome the presumption of correctness.

The Petitioner HAS NOT shown by a preponderance of evidence that the assessment was based on an arbitrary appraisal practice different from like property in the same county.
